THE ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOG

Full titles by Authors

NOTE

In this catalog the books are recorded under (1) author, in Clarendon type; anonymous books having Clarendon type for the first word; (2) title in Roman; (3) subject-heading in SMALL CAPS; (4) name of series in Italics. The figures in parentheses are not the imprint date, but refer to the date of "The Publishers' Weekly" in which full title entry will be found and not to the day of publication, for which information should be sought in the full title entry thus indicated. Where not specified, the binding is cloth.

Since July, 1902, the prices of net books published under the rules of the American Publishers' Association are preceded in this list by a double asterisk , and the word net follows the price. The prices of fiction (not net) published under the rules are preceded by a dagger †. The prices of net books not covered by the rules, whether published by members of the American Publishers' Association or not, are preceded by a single asterisk, and the word net follows the price.

The abbreviations are usually self-explanatory. A colon after initial designates the most usual given name, as: A: Augustus; B: Benjamin; C: Charles; D: David; E: Edward; F: Frederic; G: George; H: Henry; I: Isaac; J: John; L: Louis; N: Nicholas; P: Peter; R: Richard; S: Samuel; T: Thomas; W: William.

Sizes are designated as follows: F. (folio: over 30 centimeters high); Q. (4to: under 30 cm.); O. (8vo: 25 cm.); D. (12mo: 20 cm.); S. (16mo: 17½ cm.); T. (24mo: 15 cm.); Tr. (32mo: 12½ cm.); Fe. (48mo: 10 cm.). Sq., obl., nar., designate square, oblong, narrow books of these heights. In cases where the record is not made directly from the books, the designations 4to, 8vo, 12mo, etc., are used.

Months are abbreviated as follows: Ja January; F February; Mr March; Ap April; My May; Je June; Jl July; Ag August; S September; O October; N November; D December.

The full name of publisher and address will be found in the Directory of American Publishers, pp. xix-xlvi.

ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOG, 1908

FULL TITLE ENTRIES

Of Books recorded January 1 to December 31, 1908, with descriptive annotations, arranged alphabetically by Authors

- Abbarbanell, Jacob Ralph. The heart of the people. Bost., C. M. Clark Publishing Co., 1908. 4+360 p. il. 12°, cl., $1.50.
- Abbot, C: Greeley, and Fowle, F. E., jr. Annals of the Astrophysical Observatory of the Smithsonian Institution. v. 2. Wash., D. C., [U. S. Office of the Superintendent of Documents.] 1908. 245 p. pls. tables, figs. Q. gratis.
- Volume 1 appeared under Langley, S: P., and Abbot, C: Greeley in 1900. Since the death of the late Secretary Langley C: G. Abbott has become Director of the Astrophysical Observatory. This volume contains careful and comparable measurements of the solar radiation and its effects upon climate and life upon the earth.
- Abbott, D: Phelps. The history of a strange case: a study in occultism. Chic., Open Court Publishing Co., 1908. 50 p. 8°, pap. (Add. pubs. for price.)
- Reprinted from The Open Court for May and June.
- Abbott, D: Phelps. The marvelous creations of Joseffy. Chic., Open Court Publishing Co., 1908. c. 24 p. il. O. pap., 15 c.
- "Joseffy" is Mr. Freud, an Austrian born in Vienna, who has been most successful as magician. He was 10 years old when he came to the United States. He is a man of scientific trend of mind, a fine violinist and master of six languages. He has studied the occult, and he fully hopes "to penetrate the mysteries of the higher magic and go as far as it is possible for mortal to go."
- Abbott, Rev. Edwin Abbott. Indices to Diatessarica: [harmony of the four Gospels;] with a specimen of research. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. 62+152 p. 8°, cl., *$1.25 net.
- Published in the belief that they may be of use to a student of the Gospels in ascertaining the truth that lies beneath their often divergent accounts. They are prefixed by "a specimen of research" consisting of the account of a critical investigation of Josephus's version of The Sweetening of the Waters of Marah. This forms a practical example illustrating how the "Indices" might be employed.
- Abbott, Ernest Hamlin. On the training of parents. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1908. c. 141 p. D. cl., $1 net.
- One of the editors of The Outlook discusses the relations of parents and children from the standpoint of psychology, shrewd common sense and pithy humor. He specially inculcates self-control in the parents and a working together for the best good of the child. He analyzes the pressing daily issues in the bringing up of children amid the perplexing conditions of modern life.
- Abbott, J. H. M. Letters from Queer Street: some of the correspondence of the late John Mason. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. 318 p. 8°, cl., *$1.75 net.
- Abbott, J. H. M. The South seas, (Melanesia;) with 12 full-page il. in color by Norman Hardy. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. 8+83 p. map, 12°, (Peeps at many lands ser.) cl., *75 c. net.
- Abbott, Jacob. Rollo at work, and Rollo at play; introd. by Lucy Crump. N. Y., Dutton, 1908. 16°, (Everyman's lib.) cl., *35 c. net; leath., *70 c. net.
- Abbott, Lyman, D.D. The home builder. Bost., Houghton Mifflin Co., 1908. c. 129 p. D. hf. cl., 75 c. net.
- Treats of woman's work in the world from the home side, not from the business woman or "girl-bachelor" aspects of living. The first chapter, "Her monument," treats of the home she makes as woman's kingdom, and this thought is developed throughout the book under the chapter headings: The daughter The bride, The wife, The mother, The housekeeper, The philanthropist, The saint, The grandmother, Alone.
- Abderhalden, Emil. Text-book of physiological chemistry. In 30 lectures; tr. by W: T. Hall and G: Defren. N. Y., John Wiley & Sons, 1908. c. 13+722 p. 8°, cl., $5 net.
- Abdu'l-Baha. Some answered questions; collected and tr. from the Persian by Laura Clifford Barney. Phil., Lippincott, 1908. 14+344 p. O. cl., *$1.50 net.
- Presents certain aspects in the form of question and answer of the doctrine and belief of Bahaism, whose founder was born at Tihiran in 1817 A.D. This religion, which now has adherents in all parts of the civilized world, "is a simplification and unification of all known religions. It is first a belief in God and in all His manifestations."
- Abercrombie, Lascelles. Interludes and poems. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 174 p. D. cl., *$1.25 net.
- The titles of the interludes are: The new God, a miracle; Blind; The fool's adventure; An escape; Peregrinus. Those of the poems: Soul and body; The trance; Ceremonial ode; "All last night"; December 31st; Hope and despair; "Roses can wound"; A fear; Indignation, an ode. "Blind" was first published in The Albany Review, and several of the poems have appeared in The Nation.
- Abernethy, Larkin S: The Abernethy shorthand; for all kinds of stenographic work, being especially adapted to expert court reporting. Rev. ed. Shawnee, Okl., James E. Driggers, 1907, [1908.] c. 24 p. 12°, bds., $1.50.

Abraham, Ashley Perry. Rock-climbing in Skye; with thirty full-page il. in colotype, nine diagrams of the chief routes, and a map. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1908. 24+330 p. O. cl., *$7 net.

Author is president of the Fell and Rock-climbing Club, and member of the Climbers' Club. The work is minutely descriptive of climbing the mountains of Skye, the Cuillin, generally conceded to be the finest in the British Isles.

Mr. Adams collaborated with Stewart Edward White in the novel of "The mystery." The scene of this weird story is laid in a little fishing village on Long Island, where a few visitors are spending the winter at a little boarding house; among them is a young doctor in search of health, an archaeologist and a professor of science. "The flying death" first appears when the visitors go to the help of a wrecked vessel; one of the crew when brought ashore is found dead with a deep wound in his back. For weeks afterwards the people are startled by hearing strange sounds in the air, while other deaths occur." It is not until the last page that "the flying death" is explained.

Taking Boston as the scene of her novel the author deals with the narrow conventions of old Beacon Hill and the livelier spirit of the younger set. The heroine, a woman of rather low New England parentage, only becomes Mrs. John Vernon after the birth of her daughter and the approaching death of the man who has taken care of her. With her new name comes great wealth. She returns to Boston and takes her place in society, but the scandal of her life leaks out and she is forced out of Boston society and goes on the stage.

Albanesi, Mrs. Effie Adelaide Maria. The forbidden road; il. by C: Johnson Post. N. Y., Cupples & Leon Co., [1908.] c. '07. 9-316 p. D. cl., 75 c.

A flighty, extravagant young widow, who gambles, spends money like water, and is not overcareful as to the means of getting cash to pay her debts, has, before the story opens, in a moment of financial desperation, forged a check upon a rich man about town, who has been paying her special attention. She has a real friend in her children's governess, who guards her as best she can from the results of her folly. The hero is a rich young man of high principles, who has a strong influence upon the events of the story. London high life affords a picturesque background to an unsensational love story.

Scene laid in Italy. Told in the first person. Writer begins as a child puzzling over the lives and the relations of her father and mother. She adored her father, an inventor and manufacturer; she misunderstood her quiet, undemonstrative mother. She goes to work in her father's business at the age of fifteen, and meets her fate in one of her father's workmen. At sixteen she is married to this man by her parent's wishes. Then comes her life of sex, of awakening to the realization of her capacities, of her deep study of conditions that influence woman, her practical work of reform, her unhappy home life, her devotion to her son, for whom she bears all things; her gradual understanding of her mother and father.

A large part of this work is an autobiography presenting a vivid picture of the life, in New York, of a wealthy young aristocrat of eighty years ago. Another feature is General de Peyster's bold and trenchant criticisms of public men, our generals, and the battles of the Civil War. Ten chapters are devoted to ancestry. Careful studies cover the history, for centuries, of the old New York families of de Peysters, Watt, de Lancey, Colden, Van Cortlandt, Leuckermans, Livingston, MacPheadriss, French, Phillips, Beckman, Nicoll, Van Rensselaer, Schuyler, and Van Sligtenhorst.

the years 1903-07; [with a supplement by Lieut. Hansen.] 2 v. N. Y., Dutton, 1908. il. niaps, O. cl., *$8 net.

The accomplishment of a voyage from the Atlantic to the Pacific along the northern coast of the American continent—the dream of explorers for nearly four hundred years—is in itself enough to give vital interest to these volumes. The work has scientific value as well, on account of the investigation of magnetic conditions around the north magnetic pole carried on by Captain Amundsen and his men, and ethnological importance through the new information given on the subject of the Eskimo. But what will probably appeal most fully to the readers is the day to day record of a few brave men penetrating icy straits and uncharted seas, the story of their life among the friendly Eskimos, and their final success after more than three years of dangers and triumphs. Lieut. Hansen gives the record of his sledge expedition to Victoria Land in the spring of 1905.

Anderson, Mrs. Ada Woodruff. The heart of the red fir: a story of the Pacific northwest; il. by C. Grunwald. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1908. c. 313 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A story of the Puget Sound country—Seattle, Olympia, and a settlement in the neighborhood of Mount Rainier—in the seventies, after the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. It is not historical, but chronicles conditions of that epoch now drawn to a close. The author is a native of the Pacific West, and one of the best known literary women of Seattle, Wash., where she resides. She has been writing short stories of the West for the magazines since 1900. This is her first novel.

The author was the pastor of a prominent church in the city of Saint Louis from 1858 to 1866, and his personal observations made at that time throw a new light on one phase of the Civil War. During this period the state of Missouri was disputed ground. Its citizens were divided between secession and union, between slavery and emancipation. Saint Louis naturally bore the brunt of the struggle, and Dr. Anderson's account of the strenuous life there during the Rebellion opens up a comparatively unworked field.

The story is told through the diary of the heroine a young and lovely artist, living in New York City under the care of an old nurse. The time is the present. Taken by a friend to a meeting of the New Hedonists, a crowd of unconventional men and women who discuss love and marriage in unconventional terms, she meets her fate in "Narcissus," the Welsh poet of passion. Her marriage with him is a pitiful story of his intense selfishness and neglect.

An intimate personal account of a journey over the Caucasus and into and through Persia in an automobile. The party, which consisted of two ladies and five men, including the author, traversed Bessarabia, a country which will still for many years be unknown to motorists, and by this means also visited the Caucasus and the Crimea, where snow and rain more than anything else obstructed them. Then, after a few excursions around Batun and Koutais, the automobile was shipped to Baku in Persia. There also one of the party vainly tried to motor over the impassable mountains that in the region of Tabriz guard the great plateau of Iran. The rest of the party reached by automobile the second sacred town of Persia—Kum.

Annesley, Mrs. Maude. The door of darkness. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 349 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The novel opens at Monte Carlo. Mr. Hamilton stands behind his daughter's chair watching with much amusement her initiation into the "game." A distinguished looking man sitting next to her, who always wins, gives her advice, and it is shown that both the girl and the man have occult powers. The scene is transferred to England, the Hamiltons finding themselves near neighbors to their acquaintance of Monte Carlo. He has an Italian name and is apparently a gentleman. An intense love affair follows, which has some gruesome episodes. The Italian, it is intimated, has lived many generations and is under a frightful curse, which forbids him to marry. The dramatic ending is left to the reader.

Professor Jackson, a great London scientist, claims to have made a discovery by which he can separate what he calls the astral body from the physical. While the physical lies in his laboratory in a death like trance the owner of the astral body can by willing it go to any part of the world he desires in a flash. A young Englishman, persuaded to make the experiment, wills himself (or his astral body) to India. There he finds himself in the temple of the Brotherhood of Wisdom, an association dedicated to the acquisition of scientific knowledge, at any price and by any means, and discovers they are holding as prisoner the astral body of a beautiful girl. How she or it is finally rescued, in spite of the weird powers of the Brotherhood, is told in many scenes of thrilling interest.

Author is director of the Physico-Chemical Nobel Institute, Stockholm, and one of the most independent of modern scientists. He formulates the theory that "from the principle of the mechanical radiation pressure of light"—that rays of light falling upon a surface tend to push that surface back—a new theory of world building has been evolved. He thinks Venus and Mars alone of our planetary system are habitable and possibly some of Jupiter's moons. He contends the universe never had a beginning and can never have an end, but is constantly changing and we on earth are constantly receiving "solar dust."

North Carolina has published 26,000 volumes of 1000 pages each, and from these state documents, which he assisted in gathering, the author has drawn his exhaustive history. He feels it his duty to do this great work for his state since those he considers more competent have not the required time. He divides the 200 years covered in this volume into 6 epochs and the 6th epoch ends in September, 1783, when Great Britain formally acknowledged the United States and North Carolina entered upon her career as a separate, distinct and sovereign state.

The book is made in three sections: the first containing merely the text of the plays; the second the grammatical exercises based upon them, and the third the vocabulary. This plan has been adopted for two reasons: it has been thought that the interest of the student, that valuable ally, would thus be more strongly appealed to; also that without the distraction of omnipresent notes greater concentration of attention would be possible. The material used has been taken from Michelet, Guizot, Taine and other historians, and from Molière, Corneille, Beaumarchais, Rouget de Lisle, and Alphonse Daudet. Author is professor in the University of Chicago.

A young girl, fresh from an English school, finds herself suddenly a part of the queer society that makes up the life of Cape Town, South Africa. Her father, of a good English family, has for many years been an unscrupulous adventurer. After fifteen years of separation he sends for her to come to South Africa. Her uncle, with whom she has lived, has been ignorant of the depths to which his brother has fallen, and she has always retained an ideal of him. His plan is to practically sell her to an old rich Jew. His conscience leads him to commit suicide the day before his daughter's wedding. She then marries a Boer farmer and settles permanently on the lonely veldt. Gives a good picture of the Boer's primitive life, and the "get rich quick" people of the alien population of the South African mining towns. By the author of "The Shulanite."

About 1850, when the Island of Nevis, British West Indies, was at the height of its prosperity, it became a fashionable winter resort for English people. One of the greatest hotels in the world was there, and great splendor of living among the planters. The author of "Ancestors," etc., has selected this period and theme as the background of a romantic story. The hero and heroine are English. The story is saturated with the atmosphere of the tropics.

Atkins, Evan A. Practical sheet and plate metal work; with over 100 illustrations. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. 491 p. 12°, cl., *$2 net.

A practical text book for the use of boiler-makers, brazers, coppersmiths, ironworkers, plumbers, sheet metalworkers, tinsmiths, whitesmiths, zinc workers, and others who require a knowledge of the working up of metals or development of surfaces. The distinct feature of the book is that the patterns are shown set out as they would be in the workshop, with hints as to allowances for joints, wiring and notches, bending up, use of tools and so on. By a careful study of the book the mechanic will become a more expert craftsman, and at the same time learn the art of cutting up metal economically. The book, too, will serve as a work of reference for works managers and draughtsmen, and will lead to the more extended use of sheet metal in aiding the present "new art" tendency to evolve newer shapes of articles for household and general use. The author is head of the metal trades department, and chief lecturer on practical geometry at the Municipal Technical School, Liverpool.

Reflects the life of a small California town, with its aspiring college, its narrow social order and its pretensions to culture and progress. One of the heroes is a professor of biology from the East, who imagines himself in love with a beautiful brainless girl, whom he marries. Another typifies western "push." He is married to a cultured young woman, who finds her home very dull and commonplace. The complications that arise in the lives of these mismatched couples are pictured in a very up-to-date style. By the author of "Isidro" and "The land of little rain."

A callow young man and a very self-contained young lady are forced to share each other's company for the whole of the first of April. Their adventures begin with a stroll in the country, which leads them to a circus tent; from here they presently emerge with a panic-stricken mob which is fleeing from an escaped snake. Many other remarkable events happen, all ending in an unexpected romance and all as funny as the author's "Memoirs of a baby."

This is a diary of girls in boarding school during those years when the world is made up chiefly of two kinds of excitement: sentiment and scrapes. Those who are concerned with the story are all healthy, charming children—Roberta, who writes the "events," "Ben," whose cleverness inspires it, and Constantia, who prefixes to each event a kind of "pœm" truly remarkable. The story involves grown-ups and their various affairs, seen from the genuine schoolgirl point of view, and expressed in the exact language of the age.

A new version of the old Christ-taught doctrine of God all and in all. The author, who is a physician, claims that the church, the rulers and an insufficient knowledge of the Bible have stood between man and his Maker. He does not give heed to what has been taught of the past or prophesied of the future, but aims to make each person feel that it is his thought and conduct in the present moment that must show the world that every man may be perfect and worthy to belong to the equitable union with God and Jesus Christ, who was sent to show how every man may be divine.

Colonel Jeremiah Stow is Colonel Greatheart. He is a brilliant soldier whose chief aim in life is to keep his honor unsullied. The struggle between king and Parliament in England is the period of the tale, and the stirring scenes of that bitter war make a vivid background for the feats of Colonel Stow. He vows his love and loyalty to Lucinda Weston who proves unworthy, but at last finds happiness with a sweet Puritan maid in spite of having drawn his sword for the king against the Roundheads, with whom she sympathizes.

Bailey, H: Christopher. The god of clay; with il. by Alec C. Ball. N. Y., Brentano's, 1908. c. '07. 382 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The god of clay is Napoleon I., whom the story pictures a man with "the brain of a god and a mean man's heart." There are twelve chapters, each devoted to a phase of Napoleon's journey from obscurity to power. He is shown as a formidable adventurer placed at the centre of thoroughly dramatic situations. The story is strongly anti-Bonaparte. Josephine de Beauharnais afterwards Empress, gives the great scheming Bonaparte many anxious hours. History is not always the first consideration, but the author has made a thrilling romance.

The author of "Holly" and other novels tells another pretty love story, which has its scene on the rock-bound coast of New England. A beautiful and wealthy New York girl, seeking a rest from social duties and the attentions of a foreign count, is spending a few weeks at her maid's home. Out fishing one day, she drops her oar and is lost in the fog off the coast from Gloucester. She is rescued by a young man, who is an employee in one of her own mines in the West. The girl refuses to make known her identity, the pair finally drifting into love with each other. The ending is a surprise.

After many years abroad Lawrence Kellogg returns to the place where he was born, a town in western New York, the possessor of a fortune and the title of doctor. He settles in a modest way in a small office and begins to take up the threads of the past. His special chum, now a minister, has married the girl Lawrence loved ten years ago and lost mysteriously. In trying to unravel the mystery he is brought in close contact with his old sweetheart, and discovers she is very unhappy and still loves him. He also discovers the minister is a drug fiend and is troubled with pangs of conscience. Out of these conditions a tragedy grows, and the doctor is accused of having murdered the minister and is put on trial for his life. A dashing widow is involved in the story. The circumstantial evidence for a time seems overwhelming.

At the request of many little readers the author of "The land of Oz" tells another of his stories of marvelous adventure in fairyland. Dorothy Gale of Kansas is in San Francisco on the day of the earthquake. She is in a wagon on her way to her Uncle Henry when the earth opens and the horse, wagon, the driver Zeb, Dorothy and her kitten Erreka all sink through it, going down, down, till they reach the Land of the Mangaboos, where the same earthquake finally brings up the Wizard of Oz, who helps them escape to Oz. Princess Ozma and other old friends are introduced and many new characters. The people and the adventures are just as funny as those of the previous books of the writer.

A story of France which illustrates the far-reaching effects of the new law of separation of church and state. A little school conducted by five sisters at Lyons is closed by the police. There is no place for the nuns to go, as every "mother-house" is crowded with refugees. Four of the women find worldly occupations; the fifth, Pascale, a mere girl, beautiful and sincerely desiring to resist temptation, has a sad and painful experience, which is told with characteristic French candor.

Bazin, René. Redemption, ("De toute son âme";) tr. by A. S. Rappaport. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. 300 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

A successful millinery establishment in the thriving city of Nantes, France, furnishes the stage for the loves, trials and pleasures of the young girls who trim hats and dream dreams and reap the consequences of their own acts and of the acts of others. The guiding spirit is Henriette, the head milliner. Her personal history makes her long to make redemption and de toute son âme (with her whole soul) she devotes herself to brighten the lives of all about her. The temptation and sin of one of the characters furnish the circumstances that lead to the slight plot.

Author of "The spoilers" again places his story in an Alaskan mining town sprung into sudden fame by the discovery of gold. Old man Gale, a mysterious trader of the Yukon, the father of three children mothered by an Indian squaw; his eldest daughter, a beautiful girl of eighteen, whose birth is "the barrier;" Lieutenant Burrell, a young Kentuckian, sent by the United States with a handful of men to act as mounted police; Polcon Doret, the light-hearted, great-hearted Canadian voyageur; two "bad men" who have wrongs to avenge—these are some of the characters in this tale of primitive passions, of a great hate and a great love.

The leading character, whose strong personality pervades the whole story, is John Diver, the son of a Yorkshire clergyman. Brought up in entire ignorance of real life, and educated by his charming old father, an orthodox minister deeply versed in the classics, he is suddenly plunged into the whirl of London fashionable life. His character is developed through a frivolous woman's interest in him and his deep love for a girl, whom he makes his wife, but who loves another man. He travels, is amazed at the wickedness of the world, writes socialistic books and is sent to Parliament. He strays away from his father's faith, breaking the old man's heart, formulating a merciless, hopeless creed which leaves him friendless and alone.

Begbie, Harold. The vigil. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 392 p. D. $1.50.

A young Englishman of good family leaves Oxford, having studied for the church. He has doubts of his fitness and for a time settles quietly in a rural district, devoting himself to books and art. Then he decides to take orders and becomes a ritualistic English Churchman, taking the vow of celibacy. He is sent to a small, hopeless town by the sea. He elevates the tone and works hard to improve his parish. Called to the deathbed of a dissolute physician he finds he can say nothing to comfort the man, who sends for the Methodist minister. This starts thoughts in the ritualist and much of the book is given to his self-examination in many vigils. A rich young woman of strong character aids him in his work; he finally leaves the town and becomes a socialistic revivalist—denouncing the present weakness of the church in truly uplifting humanity.

The writer of the "Upon letters" is known as an experienced educator. For seven years he was an Eton boy, and then, after leaving Cambridge, he returned to Eton as a master, and remained there in that capacity for nearly twenty years. The kind of teaching with which this book concerns itself by way of definition and criticism is the Eton-Cambridge type, but, as Mr. Benson says, the aims and hopes and difficulties of the teacher are much the same in all schools, and the ideas advanced here regarding his profession hold as true for America as for England.

The leading character is an unctuous, hypocritical, dishonest middle-aged English solicitor, of whom an elaborate and clever character study is offered. He is the moving cause of the events that make up a story of life that has its scenes in a few wealthy homes at Brighton, England. Morris Assheton is about marrying when the story opens, and an accounting has to be gone into of his estate. His solicitor has been gambling with the funds that he has in trust and dreads the hour when he will be exposed. A murder cleverly planned, for which Assheton stands trial, brings matters to a crisis.

Benson, Father Rob. Hugh. Lord of the world. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 25+352 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

Father Benson lays his vision of the final outcome of "Modernism," materialism and "psycho-fads" well into the middle of the present century. The spiritual rulers of all denominations are shown struggling with the new order of the world, to which even the great Catholic church has been obliged to yield. After showing the outcome of all religions and all cults of all nations, the story brings out that all human invention in material things and all intellectual dissipation of undisciplined minds will be found unsatisfying, and that sooner or later the great heart of humanity will be ready to accept once more "the Lord of the World."

The man tells his own story with much humor and good sense, relating how he got his farm, how he improved it, and how he became "a lord of lands."

St. Bernard was born 1091; in his day he was a most commanding personality. He could create ropes and command kings and lead councils in his way. His advice was asked by the greatest persons in church and state, and he was even adored by the common people, who fancied he was an inspired man and endowed with the gifts of healing. This treatise on "Consideration" is the greatest of St. Bernard's writings. Contains his thoughts concerning a true pastor of Christendom. Translated into English for the first time.

Bindloss, Harold. By right of purchase, with a front, in colours by Alfred Ja. Dewey. N. Y., Frederick A. Stokes Co., [1908.] c. 6+345 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

The scene is western Canada, in a great wheat growing district. It is the story of a young English girl who marries the owner of an immense farm in the northwest through mercenary motives. She does not consider him her social equal, in fact rather despises him, because he works with his hands. Her gradual change, from antagonism to the mode of life and habits of thought of a new country, to contentment and happiness and admiration for the many noble qualities of her husband, whom she learns to love, is the story. The dangers they share bring out the girl's best traits, the conclusion being a victory for both

A novel of the Klondike, by the author of "The dust of conflict," etc., showing intimate knowledge of this far northern region and of life in a mining community. The hero is a man exiled by the indirect consequences of his championship of the people. He drifts to Alaska, where he stakes a claim, taking as his "partner" a socialist leader, whose ardor and personality arouse in him the strongest affection. They have many startling adventures together, discover gold, narrowly escape death, and find themselves both in love with the same woman.

Author of "Winston of the prairie" and other stories of our West has chosen the Canary Islands and West Africa for the scenes of this tale of adventure. Two men, one a plucky, forceful American, the other an artistic, ease-loving Englishman, each for the love of a woman attempts to raise a steamer sunk in a West African river containing a valuable but elusive cargo. A Spanish bullfight is also worked into the story.

Birkhead, Alice. The master-knot. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 320 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Cupid ties the master knot in the lives of two women. One is a brilliantly educated companion to a selfish woman, who one day forgets her at a picnic. A young Irish physician befriends her and offers her marriage, taking her home to Ireland and race horses. The other is a great actress, who also writes successful books and exercises great influence on the first woman. The Irish life is described with spirit. Both women after a time learn to appreciate the faithful love offered them in place of their visionary ideals and self-deceptions.

This completes a series in uniform binding of the works of the great Norwegian novelist and moralist. "The heritage of the Kurts" is a substitute by the English editors and translators for the original Norwegian title, whose literal translation would be "Flags are flying in town and harbor"—the meaning of which would not be readily apparent to American readers.

Blake, Katharine Evans. The stuff of a man. Indianapolis, Ind., Bobbs-Merrill Co., [1908] c. 423 p. front. D. cl., †$1.50.

The hero, a young Kentuckian, has been left a large inheritance, provided he will live on his estates and spend his time and fortune to fight the battles of the oppressed negro and work for his education and final position as a man of another race, but still of the "stuff of a man." not a brute. He hesitates; all the old Southern prejudice holds him back. He goes to his lands to study conditions and there meets men and women who start him in his work for the negro. The horrible conditions at present existing are not condoned, but much of the evil is traced to the white man.

This work is compiled from diaries and letters dating from the time of the Regency to the middle of the nineteenth century. The value of the work lies in its natural unblemished picture of the life of a cultured and well-born family in a foreign environment at a period so close to our own that it is far less familiar than periods much more remote. There is an atmosphere of Jane Austen's novels about the lives of Admiral Knox and his family, and a large number of her well known contemporaries are introduced into Mrs. Blake's pages.

As in his larger work on the "Gothic architecture of England," it has been the aim of the writer to present the subject from an evolutionary point of view. The story, therefore, commences with the rood and rood beam of the early Christian churches; it follows their gradual development on the one hand into the chancel screen of the parochial and collegiate churches; on the other hand into the choir screen and rood screen of the churches of the monks and the regular canons. Finally it traces to the transposition of the rood into the galleried churches of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. It is the story of growth and development conditioned by doctrinal and ritualistic changes spread over sixteen centuries. Bibliography (2 p.). Index locorum. Index rerum.

The experiences of Bridget Burke, a green Irish girl, from the day she landed at Ellis Island to be introduced into New York servanthood. She obtains a "place" at once with the wife of a liquor dealer and has some remarkable adventures. She quickly passes on to another "place" as an experienced cook and keeps going on higher and higher to more and more wages. The writer seizes the humorous side of her story most cleverly, giving a true picture of the ignorance and incompetency of the "greenhorn." The heroine, however, is a big, handsome girl, with many redeeming traits.

The France of to-day is the scene, with the struggle of the civil government to separate church and state. The leading character is the Marquis de Clavières-Grandcamp, the last representative of a noble house. The responsibilities the name carries, the limitations it places upon the old aristocrat's usefulness are illustrated by the story. His son Landri's career in the army is cut short by his refusal to aid in a forcible entry into a church for the purpose of making an inventory of its contents. His father will not permit his marriage to a most estimable woman, because she is not his equal by birth. In the end the Marquis's heart is broken by the discovery that Landri is not his son, but the son of his wife's lover. Landri, under another name, marries the woman he loves and emigrates to Canada.

Presents the Hungarian point of view to English readers in picturesque form. The great desire of the Magyars to appear to advantage before Englishmen has not blinded the author to their defects and he has unsparingly criticized them after profiting by their unbounded hospitality to gain his information. He specially dwells upon the many nationalities inhabiting Hungary and their great influence in bringing about present political conditions and keeping up the most varied social and family customs. His concluding chapter on the Future of Hungary is full of food for deep thought.

Bright southern Italy is the scene. The King, in order to right a wrong he did his brother, Charles Martel, by the usurpation of Charles' kingdom, betroths, at his death-bed, his beautiful granddaughter, Giovanna d'Anjou, to Andreas of Hungary, the rightful heir to the throne, who arrives in Naples on the eve of the King's death. No sooner had the King breathed his last, when Giovanna defies her grandfather's will, disregards her promise and scorns the claims of Andreas. A struggle for the throne follows. After many dramatic scenes the sword decides.

An analysis of the marriage bond in its entirely modern aspect. The couple who illustrate the writer's conception of matrimony, as she sees it to-day in New York City among a certain set, are artists and bohemians. When they marry they agree to preserve their individuality by each going his or her own way and they retain their old friendships. They enjoy life thoroughly for a few years. Then come children and debts and finally jealousies, with a threatened tragedy. Told with the bright dialogue that made "The eternal spring" and the author's other books so readable.

The political and social life of Boston forms the background. There is about to be an election for governor of the state, and the intrigues of the bosses and leaders to nominate their own man are depicted with vivid realism. Matthew Porter, an educated, high minded man, becomes the Democratic candidate. A woman belonging to Boston's most aristocratic set, is brought to the point of receiving him, although "the people," he represents are "disgusting" to her. The development of Porter's character and the strong influence it has upon the society woman who is a great factor in his final success, is rich in real interest. Author of "The private tutor."

Brady, Cyrus Townsend, D.D. The adventures of Lady Susan; with frontispiece by C. Weber-Ditzler. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. c. 372 p. D. cl., †$1.50

An ancient castle in England in the early part of the eighteenth century is the scene of a novel of high life. The chief characters are: Robert Monington, Earl of Aldenford, his countess, Susan Hubbard, the orphan daughter of a wealthy American shipmaster, her friend Mistress Deubie Slocum, a little Puritan from Massachusetts, the Earl of Strathgate and other social lights. The keynote of the story is intense jealousy, which leads to an amazing series of adventures. It separates husband and wife, placing both in compromising positions.

The great race of Howard, which includes the Earls of Eftingham, Northampton, Suffolk, Norfolk and Carlisle, has stood at the head of England's nobility for centuries and has been so closely associated with the political development of the nation that this work is the first complete history of what may be termed, very justly, the principal native house of England. Begins with the story of the early Howards who about the year 1250 lived in the western part of Norfolk. There are chapters on the famous "Jacke of Norfolk," Duke Jone, the victor of Flodden; the Pilgrimage of Grace in 1536. Austin Brereton for nearly twenty-five years was intimately acquainted with Henry Irving. Irving many years before his death selected him as his biographer and made over to him papers and manuscripts to be used in writing his life. The writer, as dramatic critic, had the opportunity to follow the great actor through the long years of his career, and to witness his performances in all the characters identified with him. This fact and the private friendship that he enjoyed seem to have eminently fitted him for his task. Bibliography (2 p.). Index.

The hero is one of a party of British trappers who have suffered at the hands of the French raiders and their allies, the Indians. By Washington he is appointed captain of a band of scouts, with whom he goes through many thrilling experiences in the defence of Fort William Henry. After several hair-breadth escapes he is made prisoner and taken to Quebec, from which place he escaped by means of the steep cliffs and by the aid of his former companions, the scouts. He was just in time to join the British forces in the attack upon Louisbourg, and afterwards took an important part in the capture of Quebec.

The period of the story is the middle of the nineteenth century. The hero leads the fascinating life of the cowboys; he rides the roughest horses, learns to manage cattle, has a hot engagement with the Indians, and other adventures of a most thrilling description, and with the aid of an old school friend he rids the rancher who employs them of a danger which had threatened him for many years.

Although this book is entitled "Angling and art in Scotland" it must not be thought that it is in any way a treatise upon painting. A parallel is drawn between the art of the angler and that of the landscape painter, which is, to the author's mind, "very real and ever present;" he has, however, devoted his space to the narration of certain angling experiences and descriptions of scenery, which he hopes may be of interest not only to the angler but to the general reader.

They were mostly made from specimens in the museums or herbarium of the New York Botanical Garden, and the descriptions have been drawn up from these specimens and from field observation. The Jesup collection of North American woods at the American Museum of Natural History has furnished much information relative to characteristics of woods and barks. Technical language has been avoided as far as possible.

"The riddle of personality." Mr. Bruce, who is a well-known investigator of psychological phenomena and an accomplished historian of the various lines of investigation which have culminated in the developments of to-day, has carefully studied all the recorded facts bearing upon each of the celebrated ghost stories he here relates, and follows each carefully stated story with a carefully considered modern explanation.

Bruce, H: Addington Bayley. The riddle of personality. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. c. 13+247 p. D. cl., $1.50 net.

The work deals with the scientific development and utilization of man's latent powers. It describes the wonderful work now being done by certain scientists in Europe and America to stamp the abnormal out of human life, to cure mental and nervous disease, even to assist normal, everyday man to withstand better the terrific strain of present-day conditions. It also presents, in language intelligible to the non-scientific reader, an idea of the remarkable results secured by another group of investigators, the "psychical researchers," whose special aim has been to obtain, if possible, proof of the survival of human personality after the death of the body.

The story of a young poet of Jewish extraction who begins life in the Boston slums, where he lives with his father in extreme poverty. Both are pedlars, but the boy has aspirations towards something better; the father is quite contented. One day, at the age of fourteen, when the boy is out with his basket, he strays into the studio of Miss Truesdale, a successful portrait painter. She becomes deeply interested in him and induces him to go to school and college. At the end he is earning his living with his pen. The aim of the story is to show the difficulties that often beset a Jew not only from Christians but from his own people, in his pursuit of an education, etc. By the author of "A fugitive."

A volume which adds distinctly to our knowledge of embryology. Mr. Budgett was an Englishman born at Bristol, 1872. He was a martyr to science. He made three unsuccessful trips into the heart of Africa in his untiring search for the eggs of polypteris and at last discovered them and watched the development of this most interesting animal. But shortly after he had completed a series of drawings of the external changes in the development of the eggs he was seized with a fatal attack of malaria and fever. The eggs and embryo secured under these circumstances have been carefully studied by Prof. Kerr and the results are presented in this volume.

Deals with some of the most exciting and most romantic episodes in the history of the exploration of North America. The book goes back to the time of the Norsemen and brings the history of the northwest down to the present day. The author is librarian of the Public Library at Ottawa, and has had exceptional opportunities of obtaining access to original documents, the information contained in which has never before been published.

For the youth whose lot is already cast in the city and to him who hears its call the author, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, addresses the book. The conflicting problems a young man must grapple with, often unaided, his future dependence on how he solves them, the author realizes and dwells on—Going into business, Friends, Books, Amusements, The pace that kills, The code of honor, The Christian, The honest man—trying to define in each the idealism lost in the hurry of events, yet dealing with them in the broad understanding of a man of the world as well as a clergyman.

The action of the play of "Strongheart" only covered forty-eight hours from first act to last curtain and relates only to an educated Indian's experience among white people. Mr. Burton has greatly enlarged the story, going back to Strongheart's early days, before he became a student at Columbia, and he follows his career beyond the climax of the final curtain. He also introduces several new characters. Mr. Burton's especial fitness, aside from his experience as a writer, for making this book lies in his knowledge of Indian life and character.

by Fanny J. Crosby. N. Y., International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, [1908.] c. 9-172 p. pors. pls. D. cl., $1.

Jim Burwick stole away from home on a Sunday in May when he was not yet eighteen. He went to Lafayette, Indiana, and became a railroad man. After leading a reckless life for some time he married, and by the efforts of a young sewing girl who boarded with his wife he came again under the influence of the Christian church. He mixed with men of every class and was adviser, counsellor and friend to all.

Bury, Lady Charlotte Susan Maria Campbell.

The diary of a lady-in-waiting: being the diary illustrative of the times of George the Fourth, interspersed with original letters from the late Queen Caroline and from other distinguished persons; ed. with an introd. by A. Francis Stuart; with 18 full-page portraits, 2 in photogravure. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 2 v., 15+416; 485 p. O. cl., *$7.50 net.

This book, which appeared anonymously in 1838, created great interest, and was fiercely criticised by Thackeray and in the Reviews of the time. There is no doubt that it was founded on the diary of Lady Charlotte Bury, daughter of the 15th Duke of Argyll, and Lady-in-Waiting to the unfortunate Caroline of Brunswick, when Princess of Wales. It deals, therefore, with the curious Court of the latter and with the scandals that occurred there, as well as with the strange vagaries of the Princess abroad. In this edition names left blank in the original have been (where possible) filled in and many notes are given by the editor to render it useful to the ever-increasing number of readers interested in the later Georgian Period.

Butler, Ellis Parker. The cheerful smugglers; il. by May Wilson Preston. N. Y., Century Co., 1908. c. 277 p. D. cl., *$1.

The Fenclby Domestic tariff was a simple but levelly scheme to raise a fund for Bobberts's education—Bobberts was the Fenclby's first, aged nine months. Everything that came into the house was taxed—for Bobberts—even the possessions of guests and those of Bridget the cook. The result was a rich harvest of absurd complications and ridiculous situations, such as we might expect from the author of "Pigs is pigs." The whole houseful in the end became smugglers in their efforts to avoid the tax.

Butler, Ellis Parker. That pup. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. '05. 61 p. pls. D. cl., *$50 c.

The author of "Pigs is pigs" tells another funny story about a man who receives a present of a little puppy from some unknown source. At first he is delighted with it, but as it grows and develops a habit of howling all night he decides to get rid of it. His efforts in this direction are most amusing.

The author of "The indwelling Christ" studies the great converted Jewish Rabbi first as poet and mystic, afterwards as the logician. He claims St. Paul writes with the exuberant imagination of a true Oriental, often sublimely indifferent to logical sequence and displays a subtlety of thought incomprehensible to the mere scholar and critic. Now that there is a revival of interest in mysticism, the mystical and vital movement of St. Paul's mind and his all inspiring spiritual aim deserve careful study.

A story, almost wholly, of fishing and camp life. Archie, the young hero, is the son of wealthy parents, and is spoiled and fidgetful. When lounging before the house one day a young man appears, tells Archie he is to take him on a trip, gains the boy's confidence, and picking up another boy they all start off into the country. Night comes on and the adventures of the kidnapped boys begin. The author is the wife of the librarian of Columbia University.

The second volume of a series of school readers intended to give a personal and living knowledge of the great world of commerce and industry. As in the first volume, "How the world is fed," the children, accompanied by the author, travel over the globe, investigating the sources of their clothing. The journeys are along geographical lines, and while studying the industries the children are learning about localities, trade routes, and the other features of transportation and commerce.

Carpenter, Mrs. Kate E. Rushmore. The story of Frederick the Great for boys and girls; with il. and map. Bost., Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., [1908.] c. 275 p. por. O. cl., $1.

An interesting part of the career of Frederick the Great is his unusual childhood, under the rule of one of the sternest fathers that a boy ever had. All this, as well as the story of his later triumphs which won for him the undying title of the "Great," is told in the pleasing style which has made Mrs. Carpenter's "Story of Joan of Arc" so continuously popular, and with scrupulous historical accuracy. The colored map showing "Prussia and her neighbors in the time of Frederick the Great" is a valuable feature.

Carr, Clark Ezra. My day and generation. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1908. c. 452 p. por. pls. O. cl., *$3 net.

The author of "The Illini" and "Lincoln at Gettysburg" presents some of the pivotal experiences in his long career of public usefulness. He knew intimately many of the great men and women of this country, his recollections covering our history from the period of the anti-slavery agitation down to the present time. The book is not a formal autobiography, but presents in essay form incidents in his life fraught with interest and meanings. Col. Carr's public career has indentured him with the Republican party since its inception, throwing him into contact with Lincoln, Douglas, Grant, Sherman, Logan and the great ones of the Civil War, and has included his service for four years as Minister from this country to the Court of Denmark.

Carrington, Hereward. Vitality, fasting and nutrition: a physiological study of the curative power of fasting, together with a new theory of the relation of food to human vitality; with an introd. by A. Rabagliati. N. Y., Rebman Co., [1908.] c. 35+648 p. pls. O. cl., $5.

The author is member of the Council of the American Institute for Scientific Research; Member of the Society for Psychical Research, London; and author of "The physical phenomena of spiritualism," etc. Presents a mass of entirely new material to the medical world, and to the scientific world as a whole, on a great variety of subjects. The main theme is a study of patients who have, for the cure of certain ailments, undergone more or less protracted fasts—30, 40, 50 days, and even longer; these patients being closely watched throughout that period and the observations recorded. Chapters are devoted to The pulse, The temperature, The physiological effects of the fast, etc., etc. New theories are advanced as to the nature of disease, the action of drugs and stimulants, the germ theory, the quantity of food necessary to sustain life, as to cancer, insanity, pain, fatigue, sleep, death, the causation and maintenance of bodily heat and of human vitality.

Carter, S.: Thomson, D.D. Wanted—a theology. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls Co., 1908. c. 9+144 p. D. cl., $75 c. net.
Dr. Carter pleads for a careful revision of the old creeds taught by the churches which made God a being of terror and preached eternal torture to all who did not bow to scholastic interpretation of God the Father and God the Son. The new theology is to be love and good works, a happy nature cultivated by a right spirit within and a devotion to one's brother man. Incidentally the book describes the play of "Everyman" and its hopelessness.

Case, Frances Powell, ["Frances Powell," pseud.] Old Mr. Davenant's money. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. c. 3-328 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

When the story opens, Pauline Davenant had lived twenty years on a lonely New Jersey farm, with a severe grandmother and a crabbed maiden aunt. She is invited to spend a summer with a wealthy cousin on Long Island, her life only then just beginning. Her grandfather, old Mr. Davenant, had made a strange will, leaving all his money to one of the children of this cousin. This is the mystery of the story, the question being who really got the money. Truth is much admired, but seems in the end to have chosen the right man.

Professes to be the autobiography of a Turin composer who wrote it on the back of a bundle of proofs. He was one of the characteristic products of our age, one of the sensitive, intellectual organizations doomed, by the chance of birth, to be inevitably crushed by the still rudimentary mechanism of our society. He plans to sacrifice himself and plead with the king for justice for his fellow-sufferers. Appeared in the Nuova Antologia and aroused so much feeling during its serial publication that the end had to be changed.

The theft of a very beautiful and valuable ring, an heirloom in the Chatworth family, from a glass case in a public room in San Francisco, where it was on exhibition, is the basis of the plot. The people in the room at the time of the theft were all society notables—but in spite of a thorough search of each one the ring is not forthcoming. An interesting love story follows, to which there are two heroes both in love with the same woman. How the identity of the thief is discovered after having been cleverly hidden until almost the last page forms the rest of the story.

A young New Yorker educated as a landscape gardener is hired by a Florida millionaire to beautify his acres at Palm Beach. He meets the proprietor's adopted daughter, falls in love, and learns she has married clandestinely to have a right to a name, she being a foundling. The whole story turns around the lover and the husband. The husband plays a most unselfish rôle; the end is satisfactory. Quite a picture of the life of the rich and idle. The firing line is the line of danger, which the heroine often crosses recklessly but ignorantly.

Chambers, Rob. W. Some ladies in haste. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. c. 242 p. il. D. cl., +$1.50.

A young New York clubman is cured of a habit of intemperate smoking by a clever physician through mental suggestion and by the "absent treatment." He is so charmed by the ease with which he gives up his cigars that he experiments through hypnotism upon five couples unknown to each other; in several he rectifies faults and suggests virtues, in others who are not at all intellectual he suggests "fads" and "hobbies." He mixes things up fearfully, the couples coming together in a most unconventional manner, the result being anything but satisfactory. As the young hypnotist is unable to reverse the treatment many laughable episodes are produced.

Cheetham, S.; D.D. A history of the Christian church since the Reformation. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. 12+474 p. 12°, cl., *$2.60 net.

The Archdeacon and Canon of Rochester, England, has completed a task which, he tells us, has occupied his thoughts for many years. The present work carries forward the history of the Church from the close of Archdeacon Hardwick's "History of the Middle Ages and of the Reformation," which was itself preceded by Dr. Cheetham's "History of the early church." These three books together thus form a complete history of the Christian Church, written with constant reference to original authorities, and including all the more important events and movements which have made the Church what it now is. In addition to an elaborate index, marginal notes continually assist the reader.

Chekhov, Anton Pavlovich. The cherry garden: a comedy in four acts; tr. from the original Russian by Max S. Mandell, with an introd. by the translator. [New Haven, Ct., Yale Courant, 1908.] c. 7-72 p. fold. facsim., O. cl., 75 c.; pap., 40 c.

The author was born in South Russia, January 17, 1860. He has produced a number of works, both plays and stories. While in Russia he is considered one of the greatest writers, he is little known in English-speaking countries. This is one of his first plays to be translated. It is a study of character, the action transpiring on an extensive estate in an outlying district in the vicinity of Moscow.

A series of cleverly conceived swindles perpetrated by J. Rutus Wallingford, a jovial, extravagant and luxury-loving financier and promoter, whose remarkable personality and scheming mind enable him to acquire great wealth, which he immediately proceeds to get rid of as quickly as possible. The principal cities of the east and middle west of the United States are the scenes of his operations. The scope of his activities ranges from the manufacture of carpet-tacks to the control of the entire wheat market of the United States. A satire on the "promoter" of the day.

Chesterton, Gilbert Keith. The man who was Thursday: a nightmare. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 5+281 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Two men meet in a park in suburban London and get into a discussion about anarchism. The one promises the other a most interesting evening, if he will swear never to betray what he has seen. From here follows a series of the most astonishing adventures, indescribably funny and startlingly clever. One of the men is a detective, and is admitted into the innermost circle of anarchists. The descriptions of the anarchists' meetings, their strongholds, and the anarchists themselves are very amusing. By the author of "Varied types," "Derelicts," etc.

Many critics complained of Mr. Chesterton's previous book called Heretics, on the ground that it criticised current philosophies without offering any alternative philosophy. This book is an attempt to answer the challenge. It is unavoidably autobiographical. The writer has been driven back upon somewhat the same difficulty as that which beset Newman in writing his Apologia; he has been forced to the egotistical only in order to be sincere. While everything else may be different, the motive in both cases is the same. It is the purpose of the writer to attempt an explanation, not of whether the Christian Faith can be believed, but how he personally has come to believe it.

Cheyney, E: Potts. Readings in English history drawn from the original sources, intended to illustrate "A short history of England" Bost. Ginn, [1908.] c. 36+781 p. D. cl., $1.80.

The compiler is professor of European history in the University of Pennsylvania. This book of readings, drawn from the original sources of English history, is intended to accompany the compiler's "Short history of England" as a book for further study and illustration of its subject. It corresponds chapter by chapter and in most cases, subject by subject, to that text-book, and is of about the same length. Short introductions and explanatory side-headings have been used in connection with the various extracts, to point out their significance and to connect them with the narrative in the text-book.

Childs, Mrs. Eleanor Stuart. The postscript. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. 194 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scene of this story is laid in Italy, where Esther de Trobo, the young American widow of an Italian nobleman, is living in retirement. Having no children of her own, she takes a great fancy to a little Italian orphan named Sandro, whom she has rescued from drowning, and decides to adopt him. Cune de Foresti, to shield himself as he hopes to marry Esther, persuades her to believe that her husband's with the boy's father, while Sandro is in reality Foresti's illegitimate son. The jealousy of the boy's mother, the scheming of Foresti, and the eventual discovery of his falsehood are dramatically described.

A tale of adventure, in which the chief interest settles round Capt. Samuel Tucker, the hero of the American revolution, who took more prizes, fought more sea fights, gained more victories than, with very few exceptions, any naval hero of the age. The story is told by a young American, who goes to Spain in search of Capt. Tucker and finally comes upon him in an English prison. The two escape together and go through countless adventures during the years of the Revolutionary struggle.

Dr. Christian some years ago began his investigation of the history of the form of baptism, and he is more thoroughly convinced than ever that the apostolic act of baptism was dipping and that such continued the form for many ages after Christ. This work is written in no controversial spirit, but is an effort to truthfully present the facts. It is the first book in the English language which exclusively treats of baptism in art. The pictures have been gathered from the Catacombs and churches, sarcophagi and baptisteries, mosaics and ivories of the world. Bibliography (8½ p.). Author, pastor Second Baptist Church, Little Rock, Ark.

Some ten years ago Mr. Church contributed to a book on Historic Towns, a brief historical sketch of Pittsburgh. The approach of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Pittsburgh, led to many requests that he should reprint the sketch in its own covers as a souvenir of the occasion. He has thought best to rewrite the original work, adding new material, and making it a complete though short history of Pittsburgh. The story has developed itself into three natural divisions—historical, industrial and intellectual.

Churchill, Winston. Mr. Crewe's career. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. c. 9+498 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "Coniston" writes a story American to the core. There is a great railroad in the background, a corporation given to practices which in recent times have been the cause of so much heated discussion. The two interests of love and political reform run side by side. Mr. Crewe is a fussy, self-centered millionaire, a pompous humbug, whose vanity the president of the railroad and his benchmen turn to their most unscrupulous uses. A father for years accustomed to the "management" of railroads and his son, determined to be a free and honest lawyer, are excellent foils in showing both sides of the workings of American self-government and self-interest.

Rome is the scene. Rome since Pius x. became pope. A rich American family consisting of a mother and two daughters come as tourists, and under the spell of the natural and spiritual beauties of Rome remain for a time. One daughter goes over to the Catholic church and becomes a nun on the eve of matrimony. The details of the quiet, unceasing work for the church of her Jesuit priests and those who come under their insidious influence make the story, written, of course, from the Protestant standpoint.

Author believes his system of "triple tax" will reduce political economy to an exact science. He looks to government ownership as the great solution of present problems. He sees the side of the rich man and the misconceptions and prejudices of the poor man with impersonal fairness. He finished this book nine years ago and some of his statistics have not been brought to date, but his arguments he claims have not been changed in any way by the time elapsed since they were written.

Clegg, T: Bailey. The bishop's scapegoat. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. c. 407 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

An English clergyman, avenging an insult to his sister, knocks a miserable old scoundrel down and leaves him, as he imagines, dead. The scene is Paris. The clergyman has scarcely left the house, when a doctor enters with the object of reclaiming papers incriminating his dead wife. He thinks the old man dead, but learns on examining him that he may be revived—but he leaves him to die, after finding the papers and destroying them. A man who has watched him denounces him as a murderer. He is tried, convicted, and sent to the French penal colonies in Africa. The clergyman becomes a bishop, and in visiting the colony where his "scapegoat" is dying, learns the truth. Describes convict life minutely.

Clement, Luo. The ancient science of numbers: the practical application of its principles in the attainment of health, success, and happiness; the first book of instruction. N. Y., Roger Brothers, 1908. c. 7-129 p. D. cl., $1.

An ingenious theory of numbers and corresponding letters grouped in triads, and colors grouped in the same manner has been worked out to show the influence the given name, the date of the year, the colors and the cycles have on human lives. Author advises people to learn these letterings and numberings and to change their name, accordingly, so as to avoid the unfortunate days, months and years. It is supposed to be based on the ancient systems of numbers used by the old astrologists and magicians, and also founded on the teachings of biblical lore.

Cleveland, Stephen Grover. Good citizenship. Phil., Henry Altemus Co., [1908.] c. 5-78 p. S. cl., 50 c.

Mr. Cleveland's recent death makes his words of weight. He impresses the responsibility that rests on every voter. He saw real danger in our boundless, unquestioning faith in our national destiny. The American citizen avoids the uncomfortable thought that any omission on his part can check American progress or endanger our country's continued development. Mr. Cleveland seeks to inspire an unswerving devotion to the highest ideals of civic righteousness.

The letters she received are printed, with her views of the writers, and her reasons for refusing them. Often her reflections are very amusing, especially upon matrimony generally. Mrs. Clifford is the author of "The love letters of a worldly woman."

Clifton, R: The miller and the toad. Bost., Sherman, French & Co., 1909, [1908.] c. 220 p. D. cl., *$1.20 net.

A weird, visionary story of a young miller who sits in his mill feeling remorse about a well-loved girl sacrificed to his selfish love. He sees a great toad, his last waking sight. Then he dreams, meets the lost love and together they go through space and think long thoughts upon heaven and earth, intellect, superstition, ecclesiasticism, "new thought," etc. They meet spirits long dead and discuss all that has moved the world. A great crash of lightning awakes him, the vision of Beulah vanishes and the great toad still sits; but his inward eyes have been opened and the miller begins to live for higher purposes.

As the executor of Alfred Chichester, a handsome, popular actor, his friend, Lambert Amory, is obliged to go through his private papers. He finds among other things a package of love letters, which he finally traces to a young girl with whom he is slightly acquainted. Both he and a friend become deeply interested in the girl, and either would ask her to be his wife if this incriminating episode of the letters could be forgotten. Mr. Chichester had a wife when the girl had promised to meet him, and, although their meeting had been interrupted and they had never met again the question upon which the novel turns is, Can her imprudence be forgiven? One of the men thinks it can.

Transcript of the Turin manuscript of the "Dodekapropheton," together with the "Apparatus Criticus," has been reprinted from the Journal of Theological Studies, vols. 6, 7, 8. Codex Y is the earliest known manuscript of the "Dodekapropheton" in the Lucianic recension of the Septuagint. Lucian's work embodies renderings not found in other MSS. of Septuagint which presupposes a Hebrew original superior in these renderings to the existing Massoretic text. Owing to agreement between many Lucianic readings and the Old Latin Version it has been found advisable to incorporate readings from this Version in the "Apparatus Criticus."

Jacquette is a pretty young girl who comes to a western city to attend the High School, and lives with wealthy relatives. The story, while full of interesting characters and school scenes, is really a treatise against secret societies in schools and colleges. Jacquette, after becoming a member of one, finds it interferes so greatly with her studies that she is forced to resign from it. Her sacrifice is bravely borne in the face of ridicule and all opposition.

This volume treats of an episode in American history which has received scarcely any attention, viz: the mutiny of the Pennsylvania line in June, 1783, the consequent flight of the Continental Congress from Philadelphia and the five months' sojourn of that body at Princeton. The narrative has two aims in view: first, a fuller knowledge of the Congressional history of the summer and autumn of 1783, and secondly, an account of Congressional life on its informal side when Princeton was the national capital. Mr. Collins was formerly reference librarian of Princeton University.

This series of addresses originated in "a desire to contribute to the understanding of the crisis of 1907, and to lay down some principle which might be of service in the reconstruction of our currency system." It is introduced by Prof. Seligman, and the essays deal with such subjects as banks and banking method, the New York Clearing House and its relation to currency, the interaction between the Stock Exchange and the money market, and government currency versus bank currency. Among the speakers are George W. Perkins, of J. P. Morgan & Co.; T. F. Woodlock, formerly editor of the Wall Street Journal, and the presidents of several of the most prominent New York banks.

The story of Benedict Arnold just before he became traitor to the cause of American freedom, bringing in the details of the André conspiracy. The general, who had been an apothecary, a horse trader and a sea captain of privateers when he entered the aristocratic circles of Philadelphia, yielded to extravagance and beautiful women. Deeply in debt and urged by his extravagant wife he yielded to the tempter—gold. The story introduces many of the historical documents of its day.

The author of "Lord Jim" and other stories of the sea breaks new ground in "The point of honor." The heroes are two officers of Napoleon's army who, amid the great conflict that involved the whole of Europe for fifteen years, carried on their own private warfare with a species almost of insanity, bred of the wild mood of the period. The precise reason of their mutual hatred was unknown to their brother officers. Although they fought side by side in battle and saved each other's lives they never ceased to be enemies. The final challenge on the eve of one of the officers' wedding turns into comedy, the tale ending happily.

Editor is president of the Concordance Society organized at Yale University in the Christmas vacation of 1906. The choice of authors rests on: his historical importance; the public interest in him; and the moderate compass of his works, so that the compilation may be effected by few hands in a brief time and the subvention required by the publishers may not unduly tax the resources of the Society. The basis of Concordance is Gosse's edition of Gray, and Gosse's order of poems has been followed with few exceptions. The compilers have been new at the work, but have done it with enthusiasm and common-sense and great promptness.

On September 16, 1906, Dr. Cook, who has already linked his name with both the Arctic and Antarctic Polar regions, succeeded after a disheartening failure in reaching the highest point in North America, Mount McKinley, a peak of the Rocky Mountains south of the central part of Alaska. The fact that this is the highest land on the continent was not made known till 1896, when Mr. Dickey explored the Sushitua River and the land near its source. He estimated the height of the peak at 20,000 feet, and named it after the then President of the United States, William McKinley. The present volume gives a history of the discovery and exploration of the mountain.

Gotten up on fine paper, printed on alternate pages, with red letters and ornamentation of red strawberries. The singer evidently loves the pretty place in which her lines are cast.

Cooke, Frances. "My Lady Beatrice." N. Y., Benziger Bros., 1908. c. 244+16 p. D. cl., $1.25.

By the author of "The secret of the green vase." A young New York society girl, worn out with fashionable dissipation, is sent by her doctor to the country to live the simple life. She becomes the inmate of a farmhouse with friends of the doctor, good, warm-hearted, intelligent people, who influence her character strongly for the better. She breaks her engagement with a rich New Yorker, and finally marries the young farmer under whose roof she lives. Many other incidents occur to complete her story. The characters are all Catholics.

The "Prophet of peace" was a member of the Society of Friends during Napoleon's rule. She was born in the North of England, married outside the Society and emigrated to America in search of peace. After prosperous years in farming a strict Puritan falls in love with their daughter. His people use desperate means to prevent the union and those who would use no other weapons than soft answering tongues suffer grievous wrongs. Through all the faithful mother maintains her character of "Prophet of peace" and in the end the wicked are defeated and peace comes to stay.

Author is fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and honorary member of the English, French and Italian Alpine Clubs. He writes from an experience of over forty years' wandering through the Alps. The early chapters treat of the mountains on the physical side—their pastures, glaciers, flowers, beasts and birds. Later chapters describe the diverse people dwelling in the Alps, and the explorers and guides who have penetrated their recesses. In the closing chapter the Alps are considered in detail, as forming twenty groups with diverse characteristic features.

Christ is the central figure of this story for young readers. His life on earth is followed from His boyhood to the crucifixion and His resurrection. While His divinity is maintained throughout, the period of His earthly sojourn is realistically reproduced and also the many characters that we have learned to associate with Him. Lazarus, the son of Siro, the wealthy Jewish merchant, is a strong influence in the story.

Taking as her hero an earnest clergyman in a small rural English parish the author gives a vivid picture of how the licensed drink traffic of England makes the work of her licensed clergy almost futile. In a story with excellent plot the author arraigns the drink problem, the temperance question, the reckless life of the rich and the poor, shows her views of the "Higher Church" clergy and of the worldliness of the church. A Catholic priest and a rich millionaire, both devoted to making the world better, voice some startling truths about the selfishness and materialism of the world that now rejects religious faith and strives wholly for money and what it can buy.

Jennie Jerome, a New York girl, daughter of Leonard Jerome, married when quite young Lord Randolph Churchill, whom she met in Paris, where she was living with her mother. Her reminiscences chiefly cover the last quarter of the past century, when she was Lady Churchill. In 1900, a few years after Lord Churchill's death, she became Mrs. Cornwallis West. Her life up to the present has been most remarkable; her experiences in English and European social, diplomatic and political life being unique. She met many of the most distinguished people of her generation, had the most delightful adventures and witnessed or took part in many stirring historical events. She tells the most amusing anecdotes of herself and others, and includes letters of famous people in her narrative. She is exceptionally witty and exhibits a charming humor. The volume is filled with portraits of royalties and famous people.

This sumptuous edition of the letters of Cortes presents for the first time in a consecutive English translation the five letters of relation from Fernando Cortes to the Emperor Charles V. Historians and scholars have long recognized these letters as the earliest and most authoritative source of information on Mexican conquest. The present version has been translated throughout by Mr. MacNutt, who has rendered the cumbersome sixteenth-century Spanish of Cortes in readable English. Mr. MacNutt is well fitted for his task, having been a devoted student of Spanish literature since his boyhood, when he was initiated into Spanish-American history under the scholarly direction of the late Abbé Fischer. The notes he has appended to the letters from both ancient and modern sources serve to illustrate, complete and correct the narrative.

Chronicles the experience of a Canadian girl who finds herself on English soil. Mary Trent and her brother Graham are the daughter and son of a wealthy Canadian senator. They make their first visit to the mother country after the girl has become known as an heiress and the boy has served with distinction in the war in South Africa. They are objects of more or less curiosity to their English friends as their English friends are to them. The girl's criticisms of the people she meets and the functions she attends are humorous and exceedingly witty. In line with "An American girl in London."

Designed as a picture of Chaucer the man, with a background of the world in which he lived. "No book of this size," says the preface, "can pretend to treat exhaustively of all that concerns Chaucer and his England, but the author's main aim has been to supply an informal historical commentary on the poet's works." He has not hesitated, in a book intended for the general public, to modernize Chaucer's spelling, or even, on rare occasions, to change a word. Index.

The "Fair Margaret" trilogy is brought to an exciting close in "The diva's ruby." The final struggle for Margaret's hand between Logotheti, the Greek financier, and the American millionaire Van Torp, furnishes the theme. Incidentally the fight between these two characters involves a story of a wonderful ruby mine in Central Asia, of its pillage and some of the very strange results thereof, and is also the means of introducing a new heroine in a beautiful Tartar girl. The scenes are in Paris and London and on board a yacht, also at Beyreuth.

Crawford, Francis Marion. The primadonna: a sequel to "Fair Margaret." N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. c. '07. 396 p. front. D. cl., †$1.50.

"Fair Margaret" left Margaret Donne at the opening of her operatic career. "The prima donna" introduces her two years later as a great artist. She has just finished a successful engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House, and is about leaving, when she is called to the manager's room at the request of a dying girl, who makes a confession to her which seems to accuse her fiancé, Rufus Van Torp, the millionaire, of having been her murderer. Van Torp henceforth is the leading figure, the question being did he or did he not kill Ida Bamberger, and what are his relations to another woman, etc. The scene changes from an ocean steamer to London, where we hear a great deal about the heroine's love affairs, and her fear of Van Torp.

Irresistibly funny and full of great truths on the society of the hour. The telephone, co-education, wireless telegraphy, motor cars, bridge whist, woman's rights, Sherry's, cock-tails, four-day liners, pianolas, steam heat, dirigible balloons and talking machines have brought about a social metamorphosis that calls for a new book of etiquette. The author says stingingly: "it should prove of great value to those people who have been born and brought up in refined and well-bred families, and are at the same time desirous of entering fashionable society."

Crozier, Alfred O. The magnet: a romance of the battles of modern giants; il. by Wallace Morgan. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls Co., 1908. c. 9-497 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Although written in the form of fiction "The magnet" amplifies the author's views on current financial topics, with much philosophical humor. Some of its subjects are: Central government bank plot; Elastic currency—private schemes in Congress; An exposure of the dangerous methods of Wall St.; The cause of runs on banks; Corporations in politics—new view of tariff; Political conspiracy—to seize control of the government. Mr. Crozier is a prominent lawyer and active in civil, charitable and philanthropic matters.

Crucifixion (The), by an eye-witness: a letter, written seven years after the crucifixion, by a personal friend of Jesus in Jerusalem, to an Esser brother in Alexandria. Chic., Indo-American Book Co., 1907, [1908.] c. 200 p. front. D (Supplemental harmonic ser.) cl., $1.

The story of the crucifixion, stripped of all its supernatural features. The writer denies the resurrection and ascension, claiming that Jesus came to life in the tomb and was removed by his friends to a place of safety, where he received careful nursing till his death. Also contains a contemporary description of Jesus' personal appearance, and the death warrant of Pilate under which he was crucified.

Lord Curzon was allowed to choose his subject as Romanes lecturer from the entire field of science, literature and art. He chose "Frontiers" as a subject on which there is but little authentic literature, though frontiers play so great a part in the everyday history and policy of the British Empire. Lord Curzon dwells upon the time when England had no frontier but the ocean and describes her present frontier, the greatest extent of territorial frontier of any dominion on the globe.

An outline of the psychological phenomena of Christianity covering as nearly as possible the whole field. With the exception of a few examples used for comparison and illustration, only the phenomena of Christianity are presented, but the whole range of that phenomena has been included, abnormal and normal, pathological and healthful. In general, the first half is taken up with the abnormal and the latter half with the normal. The book, written clearly and in a most interesting way, is intended for the general reader as well as the psychological and theological student. By the author of "The psychology of alcoholism."

Cutting, Mrs. Mary Stewart Doubleday. The wayfarers; il. by Alice Barber Stephens. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. 3-374 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The story of Alexander Justin, a business man of ideal character, who has plodded along in a situation for seven years, working far beyond his strength and his small compensation for the wife and children he fondly loves. With the opening of the story a chance comes to him for independence and perhaps wealth. He is put in charge of a business, but finds himself in the hands of men whose methods are utterly repugnant to him. He refuses to follow their orders and the result is almost destruction to him, financially and physically. Almost on the verge of suicide, he is unexpectedly helped from a source where his honesty has found appreciation.

Written to provide a work that covers the general field of histology, and is not restricted in the main to human and mammalian forms, as is the case with most other existing text-books in its class. The authors say that it is intended to be a work of general principles and to teach histology as a pure science and for its own sake. It exceeds the limits of an ordinary college text-book and becomes a foundation for the study of morphology and embryology, particularly with reference to a subsequent medical course. The book contains 470 illustrations, all newly and uniformly drawn, and mainly from the authors' own investigations.

The author of "Pigs in clover" offers a searching analysis of character in her study of Sally Snape, who is introduced as a small girl living in one of the most miserable alleys of London's East side. Her career is traced with realistic fidelity in her attempts to earn enough to save her from starvation; as a worker in a factory, as an assistant to a man dressmaker, and finally as a singer and dancer in a music hall, when only seventeen. Through the interest of friends she has received enough polish and education to make her very attractive. The author describes her as having "the honor of a man and the heart of a child," and aims to show how these qualities carry her unscathed through exceptional temptations.

Points out the mischief now done by indiscriminate wedding gifts, which prevent a harmonious plan of furnishing in accordance with the means and tastes of the young home-makers. The director of drawing in the public schools of Springfield, Mass., gave a series of lectures on house furnishing, in which this book had its beginning. He wishes homes to combine "the simplicity of Colonial times, the creature comforts of the 19th century, and the intellectual æsthetic and spiritual atmosphere of the 20th century."

Daniels, J. An outline of economics. Bost., Ginn, [1908.] c. 5+28 p. O. cl., 40 c.

The outline is in tabular form, with definitions and explanations arranged in logical order. Marginal notes contribute ease and lucidity to the reading. Pt. I. is a preliminary survey of value; pt. II., a summary but inclusive view of the customary divisions of the science,—production, distribution, consumption. Then follows a conclusion in brief, and a carefully prepared bibliography. The subject is covered in the large, and particular problems are located in their logical place, with the opposed opinions and the direction of solution indicated. There are a number of departures from the usual mode of treating the subject, made for the sake of added clearness, but all such departures are carefully explained to avoid confusion.

Author goes back to the earliest beginnings of book making—to the days when books were really not books at all, but rock inscriptions, tallies, quipus, wampums, and ideographs. Clear explanations are given of the distinctions, nowadays somewhat confused, between quarto and octavo, duodecimo, etc. All the different book bindings are described, from the wooded boards to the velvet bindings loved by Queen Elizabeth, and such eccentric choice as the skin of a human body. Mr. Davenport has written in a clear, text-book style, and at the end of each chapter he gives a long list of side-reading references.

Davies, Morgan W. The theory and practice of bridge construction in timber, iron and steel. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. 8+594 p. il. 12°, cl., $3.75 net.

The aim of this work is primarily to furnish easily understood rules whereby problems connected with bridge construction may be treated analytically and graphically. Examples are given of the various types of existing bridges constructed either of timber or of steel. In every instance the calculations and designs are set out step by step in their development and the illustrations have been reproduced from the actual working drawings. In most books dealing with bridge construction, the formulae for determining the stresses in bridge structures are of too general character. They involve the use of higher mathematics and consequently cannot be readily employed. This book provides simple means of calculations whereby accurate results may be obtained for all practical purposes. The work is based upon notes of lectures delivered from time to time by the late Morgan W. Davies to students of civil engineering at the Swansea Technical College.

The heart of the plot is the attempt of several unscrupulous men to influence Stephen Hallowell, an aged, dying millionaire, to sign a new will leaving all his wealth to a charitable enterprise. His first will, already signed, leaves the bulk of his property to a niece, who claims his money as a right, as it was all made from an invention of her father's, of the returns from which he has never been given an accounting. His doctor, his lawyer, and his servant are in the plot, and "Vera the medium" is brought into it, to produce the spirit of the old man's sister. There is an amusing group of spiritualists and a New York district attorney, who falls in love with the medium.

Author is certified public accountant, University of the State of New York. For many years it has been his duty to supervise the work of others, and during his experience he made notes of the best method under his observation. These notes have been valuable for reference, and the many requests from prominent accountants for access to the notes have influenced the author to publish them. The language is simple, telling how to do certain lines of work so as to lead directly to the desired results and avoid repetition. The book is divided into four parts namely: Method of working; Cost accounting; Operating forms, and Report forms.

The romance of a young man's fight for love and fortune in the forests of Maine. It describes a mighty battle against the tyranny of the timber barons and their lawless oppression—against the powers of "King Spruce." The hero, Dwight Wade, a college man, opposed in his love for the daughter of the lumber king, enters the woods with the foresters and pits his pluck against the tyrant powers. In the conflict of Wade's men with the rival gang appear quaint characters of the woods. By the author of "Pine-tree ballads," "Squire Phin," etc.

Against the background of San Francisco's week of horror Miss Dean, who herself passed through the awful experience, has projected two chief characters—a young and wealthy California girl and an Englishman, formerly of the Indian Medical Service, now an outcast and fugitive suffering the penalty of another's wrongdoing. On the night of the earthquake he becomes a thief, and ensuing events serve to show how a thief may yet become a hero. The author's purpose is to show that not only the work of men's hands but their conventional characters were overturned by the catastrophe.

De La Pasture, Mrs. Elizabeth Bonham, [Mrs. H: De La Pasture.] The grey knight: an autumn love story. N. Y., Dutton, 1908. 337 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Opens in France. A young widow is resting after nursing her husband for fifteen years. His mother and sister are sordid English ladies in straitened circumstances. The young, energetic, poetic woman decides to leave her uncongenial relations. She goes to Wales hoping to become a nurse under the physician who had attended her husband. Very suddenly she is called to the great lord of the castle, who goes to the gate of death with pneumonia. This is the "grey knight," who grows to love his silent, faithful nurse. The descriptions of Wales and of life in the old Manor house and the discovery of the "skeleton" in the life of the "grey knight" make a story of merit.

De la Pasture, Mrs. Elizabeth Bonham, [Mrs. H: de la Pasture.] The unlucky family; il. by E. T. Reed. N. Y., Dutton, 1908. c. '07. 6+293 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A worthy couple living in the suburbs of London with eleven children, eldest aged fourteen, suddenly inherit a rich estate. They take possession and the story is given over to their most farcical experiences in their new state of life. Finally the testator's brother turns up and one and all are glad to go back to hard work and life without many servants and visitors of noble rank. The illustrations are caricatures of the unlucky family in their many misadventures.

Dellenbaugh, F. S: A canyon voyage: the narrative of the second Powell expedition down the Green-Colorado River from Wyoming, and the explorations on land, in the years 1871 and 1872; with 50 illustrations. N. Y., Putnam, 1908. c. 20+277 p. O. cl., $3.50 net, boxed.

The author was artist of the second and first government expedition through a region which up to that time had been labelled "unmapped." There are many photographs which show clearly the dangers of this journey down a river "entrapped" by the mountains. The adventures of the expedition and fund of details and descriptions of the grandeur of the scenery make a volume of vivid interest.

The author, a distinguished Italian historian, unearthed a wealth of personal material of some of the famous women of the Renaissance, which makes this volume an unusually illuminating record of those times. The binding design is after a Cinquecento original and the title design has been adapted from an ancient manuscript in the British Museum. The book contains two colored plates and many reproductions in half-tone.

The author's aim is to give clear statement to the teaching of Holy Scripture regarding the Christian doctrine of salvation. Long years of painstaking study of the Bible and reflection on religious truth have enabled him to speak with originality and independence in scriptural interpretation, while at the same time a knowledge of the methods and conclusions of theologians is evidenced. The book is written in a reverent spirit.

De Monvel, Roger Boutet. Beau Brummell and his times; with a chapter on dress and the dandies by Mary Craven. Phil. Lippincott, 1908. 199 p. pls. por. O. cl., *$2.50 net.

The life of the "prince of the dandies" is rich in dramatic scenes, from the time of his first appearance at the English court as the favorite of the Prince of Wales (afterward George iv.) down to his miserable death in an asylum in France. The attitude of the author is throughout, on the whole, sympathetic. There is no unnecessary moralizing; the man is presented as he was, with his follies and defects, but with all that made his strange charm. A vivid picture is supplied of the brilliant, heartless and witty society under the Regent.

A new series, based on romantic incidents in the experience of our navy in the first two decades of the 19th century, told in a way to interest young readers. The present volume relates the various cruises of the U. S. S. "United States" under Commodore Barry in our own waters and against the Dey of Algiers. An appendix contains biographies of the naval officers mentioned in the story, and a brief sketch of the historical facts used in the series.

De Morgan, W: Frend. Somehow good. N. Y., Henry Holt & Co., 1908. c. 9+565 p. D. cl., $1.75.

Gives a remarkable picture of a complete suspension of memory. The hero accidentally drifts into the home of his wife and child after years of separation. Two love stories are interwoven into the original plot. The great interest lies in the conversations, in which the author again displays his rare knowledge of human nature and his intimate acquaintance with the widest field of good literature. The plot is complicated, but its execution is in the hands of very capable characters. The loss of identity of the hero is founded on a real incident. He wanders about a great deal and explains entertainingly.

Specially valuable for its illustrations and map. Alice Harriman tried to get photographs of the 12 adults and the 12 children who first settled Seattle in 1851. Other illustrations are of the first preacher, first school teacher, first buildings, first sawmill, and of Henry Yester, the man who built this mill and many more buildings in the town. He did not come till 1852. A long search was made for these pictures and the Alice Harriman Company deserves great credit.

First published in the spring of 1906. The author, sometime examiner in political economy at the Royal University of Ireland, died in the following November. The object of the work is to present in a compendious form an aspect of the church which may be found scattered up and down the works of various Catholic writers, particularly those of Cardinal Newman. The history of the world, so runs this argument, is only intelligible in the light of Christianity, and Christianity as a permanent factor in the life of many depends upon the Catholic church.

Intended to awake a vital conviction of the reality of moral problems and the value of reflected thought in dealing with them. To this purpose are subordinated the presentation of historic material in pt. 1; the discussion of the different types of theoretical interpretation in pt. 2; and the consideration of some typical, social and economic problems which characterize the present in pt. 3. The book enables students to follow the moral life through typical epochs of its development and to realize what is involved in their own habitual standpoints. It also presents carefully selected subject matter which can serve as material of analysis and discussion.

In 1894 Mr. Dieserud, while assistant in the Field Columbian Museum Library, Chicago, took part in classifying its notable collection of anthropological literature. Three years later as librarian of the Museum he thoroughly revised the classification, and in 1898 read a paper on the subject before the Chicago Library Club. Later, as catalogue reviewer in the Library of Congress, it was his duty to assign headings to its anthropological collection. He soon found his former classification was not definite and far-reaching enough; or else encroached on the legitimate field of neighboring sciences. He then began this select bibliography of the scope and content of the science, prefacing it with a history of those who have perfected branches of the science. The work does not give a record of all the issues of each single work. It is gotten up chiefly to explain the reasons for the classification adopted.

Along with the writer's personal experiences on the trip are descriptions of the towns visited and the scenes and scenery that were passed. The beautiful in landscape and architecture are remarked and commented on, as well as places and buildings, sacred and profane, of historical interest. The book is, in a way, a sort of literary pilgrimage to the homes and haunts of many men eminent in the world of English letters. Mr. Dillon is editor of "Marshall's Constitutional Decisions." "Practical suggestions" are given at the end of this book. Index.

Almost every phase of outdoor Florida life is pictured and described here, from the dangerous sports of capturing live alligators in the east coast rivers, to life with the bee hunters in the interior. The authors, living as they did, "in the very heart of things," sometimes cruising for weeks on their yacht along the coast, again in canoes, following clogged rivers and streams, tramping with their packs for days, have been able to get an unusual color and flavor in their stories.

Diver, Maud. Captain Desmond, V. C. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1907, [1908.] 381 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A military station on India's northwestern frontier in the early '80's is the scene of a realistic story of a soldier's life. The characters are English and native officers, with their wives and sisters and sweethearts. Captain Desmond occupies the centre of the stage at all times. He is an ambitious, efficient officer, brave to recklessness. His foolish little wife, who has no appreciation of her husband's responsibilities would, if possible, have him turn his back on all dangers and devote himself to her amusement. Her friend, Honor Meredith, is a foil to her lack of character. Full of enthusiasm and rich in common sense, she and Desmond become deeply interested in each other. The end is thrilling and dramatic.

Diver, Maud. The great amulet. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 406 p. D., cl., $1.50.

The chief scene is the same as in "Captain Desmond, V. C."—the frontier of India in the early eighties—but five years earlier than in that story. While the Desmonds appear in all the leading episodes of the narrative, the real hero is Captain Lenox, a brother officer of Desmond's, who separates from his wife—an English artist—on their wedding day. They never meet again until five years have passed, and then by chance in India they are brought together and discover they still love each other. Many dramatic happenings keep them apart for a long time. There are skirmishes in which Lenox is wounded, a cholera scare, reckless flirtations, etc. Anglo-Indian life, with its hardships and pleasure, is as vividly described as in "Captain Desmond, V. C."

The bright, unselfish, unspelled letters of Jennie Allen, an old-fashioned sewing-woman in Providence, Rhode Island, run on from the time of the San Francisco earthquake to 1907. She leads a slave's life in the house of her brother and his wife with their many children, but she has no nerves, is always philosophizing in drollest way about all she contends with, and her letters are full of quotable remarks full of great truths. Loving, helpful and breezily cheerful she endears herself to a man "too bright and original to copy after Danty and Beatriss, or Pete Rark's Laury" in making love.

The body of a prominent lawyer, evidently murdered, found on Hemlock Avenue, a quiet street of a small American town, is the beginning of the story. Circumstantial evidence points to another lawyer as the murderer and he is arrested and indicted. A young newspaper man, interested in the suspected man, is the principal in unravelling the mystery. One person after another is suspected, several being women, and finally cleared. The real explanation is simple enough when brought out at the end.

"Lucci" is one of four boys who have a camp through a summer vacation on the shore of a fine lake. "Lucci" has been a waif, but is well-born and of great artistic ability. He repays the kindness of his young friends by proving himself a real hero when occasion offers. A unique and valuable feature of the story is the instruction the boys receive while merrily helping a friendly gentleman build a home for himself. Various interesting mechanical points are interestingly explained, and the plans of the house are shown, just as the boys helped to build it.

The author of "The power of silence," "Living by the Spirit," and other volumes of essays on the inner life, has undertaken a systematic study of the higher nature of man in relation to the divine presence. This volume contains, also, a supplementary essay on Hegel's "Logic," in which Dr. Dresser makes good the practical part of his argument by reference to Hegel's fundamental analysis of immensity. As a whole, the book is a direct appeal to immediate verifiable experience, in contrast with all speculative systems. It is constructive throughout and will greatly aid those who are in search of a positive, rational faith.

By the author of "Living by the spirit" and other books on the inner life. A portion of the book is devoted to the principles which underlie the work of adaptation to individual needs and is especially meant for teachers, ministers, and others who wish to become physicians to the soul. The author has responded to a request for a refutation of Christian Science by writing an essay on the science of the Gospels. The book points the way to lines of work which may totally change present therapeutics.

Professor Driesch, of the University of Heidelberg, is one of the greatest of biologists, and has written in German three authoritative works in that line of investigation. In the lectures here republished (with modifications suited to the construction of a book) the matter of all his previous works has been reviewed and condensed, so that the present is a summary of his knowledge and opinions, making, as he says, "a definitive statement of all that I have to say about the organic." This summary in English will be welcome and of great service to all American naturalists.

Miss Du Bois is well known for her literary work dealing with Southern California. Of recent years she has earned distinction for her account of the myths and ceremonies of Diegueño Mission Indians of this region. In the summer of 1906 she spent some weeks in San Diego county in field studies with the Luiseno Indians. Both the Luiseno and the Diegueño tribes were originally attached to the Franciscan missions of California. While distinct races, they share in common the majority of their customs, arts and beliefs. Miss Du Bois gives much information gathered at recent visits and acquired at previous visits to the Mission Indians.

The author, a Southern lawyer, in a strong novel dealing with the race problem in this country, shows the danger to society from the increasing miscegenation of the black and white races. His hero is a young Harvard graduate, in whose veins runs a slight mixture of negro blood. He is represented as possessing every desirable quality—is handsome, honorable, well-bred and highly patriotic. He looks almost white, but when his story is known his experience is most painful. He marries a white girl of good social position, their first child coming into the world a thorough little negro—the mother becoming a maniac. This is the author's final and convincing climax to his apparent logical arguments.

Eddy, Arthur Jerome. Ganton & Co.: a story of Chicago commercial and social life; il. by T. Fogarty. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1908. c. 415 p. O. cl., $1.50

The chief interest in John Ganton's life is the firm of Ganton & Co., but to his keen disappointment neither of his sons takes an interest in the business. The opposition of the old millionaire to the marriage of his younger and favorite son with the brilliant and scheming daughter of the unscrupulous Jem Keating complicates the plot. The story of a young capitalist who tries to run the Chicago stock yards according to old-fashioned honest business methods is interwoven. It is John Ganton's elder son whom his father had always considered a dreamer, who eventually carries on Ganton & Co.

When Henry VIII. had his breach with the Pope he suppressed the English monastic houses both to crush the strongest bulwark of papal power in England and to obtain lands and riches to grant to the nobility to secure their favor and support. When Edward VI. began to reign the seizure of plate and ornaments in the churches continued. In 1549 a commission was ordered to make inventories of the goods of all the churches and stop all private embezzlement. These inventories are of the highest legal, historical and liturgical importance. No other country can show the like. The Alcuin Club is printing these inventories. The two already out are those of Bedfordshire and Huntingdonshire.

Eggleston, G. Cary. Two gentlemen of Virginia: a novel of the old regime in the Old Dominion; il. by Frank T. Merrill. Bost., Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., [1908.] c. 456 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

In giving his novel a setting in Virginia, in the year 1837, the author finds his opportunity of making use of knowledge obtained at first hand fifty years ago of the social life of that period. He depicts conditions which actually existed, and considers problems the slave owner had to deal with, little understood even at present. The "two gentlemen of Virginia" are a wealthy plantation owner and his nephew, both men of fine character. The story unwinds itself in the picturesque life of the plantation; it is a love story chiefly, having a most interesting heroine, whose history is cleverly concealed, keeping the reader's curiosity alive almost until the last page.

Eggleston, G. Cary. The Warrens of Virginia: a novel; founded on the play of W. C. de Mille; il. from scenes in the play. N. Y., G. W. Dillingham Co., [1908.] c. 9-344 p. D. cl., $1.50.

In shaping his novel from De Mille's play, the author accepts the history of the playwright. The Warrens of Virginia were loyal to the Southern side as Edgar Burton, engaged to a Warren, was to the Northern side in the Civil War. The story shows the horrors of war and the sufferings of both sides. The hero was in danger of death when the surrender of General Lee ended the war. After some time the Northern soldier looks up his Southern love; finds time has smoothed many prejudices and also finds a still willing, faithful Warren of Virginia.

Eldridge, G. Dyre. In the potter's house. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1908. c. 8+338 p. O. cl., $1.50.

The title is taken from the Rubāiyāt—"within the Potter's house alone I stood, surrounded by shames of clay." The shapes of clay are the inhabitants of a primitive rural community in Maine. A minister who has conquered all that is human in himself and lives only to do God's work; a farmer, a slave to all his elemental passions; and a young lawyer full of life and of well ordered mind, all love the same woman. She has been at school and is above her people and longs for life and individual appreciation. The character study is supported by a good plot.

Eldridge, W. Tillinghast. Meryl; front. by J. Rae. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 8+323 p. D. cl., $1.50.

This new novel by the author of "Hilma" has its scene in New Hampshire around Lake Winnepesaukee. "Meryl" is a young girl who comes all the way from Ireland to her supposed uncle's home on the lake. Her uncle is an eccentric recluse, who has sent a trusted servant to bring her to him. Her abduction before she reaches his home, with its resulting series of mysterious events, is cleverly told. There is a dishonest lawyer, forged documents and so on, and the brave young lover, who makes everything right.

The papers which make up this volume were written at various periods, from 1896 to 1900, but have a certain unity as being the result of an attempt, prosecuted during some years, to understand what is the real condition of Turkey, and of some neighboring countries, and how that condition has arisen. Two supplementary chapters on Turkey in 1907 have been added to the present edition and a few statements have been altered (such as that the Obrenovich dynasty still reigns in Servia) which are obviously no longer correct. By the author of "Letters from the Far East."

- Ellis, Elizabeth. The fair moon of Bath; col. front. by John Rae. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 4+342 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Bath, the once famous English watering place, furnishes the scene for Tim Curtis's courting of charming Celia Winnington. After ten years of extravagant living Mr. Timothy Curtis is ordered by his uncle, Lord Westerby, to bargain the graces of his impecunious person in exchange for the gold of a rich merchant's daughter. He is a gallant, dashing fellow, as ready to fight as to fall in love as he eventually does, winning his lady love at last after many rebuffs. With the love making, runs the conspiracy to restore the "Pretender" in which several of the characters are involved. By the author of "Bartara Winslow."

- Ellis, H: Havelock. The soul of Spain. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1908. 9+420 p. front. O. cl., $2 net.
Havelock Ellis has visited Spain five times, traversing it in all directions and leaving it by all its chief ports. He has tried to get at the spirit of Spain and as a deep student of psychology he has gained much knowledge in a shorter period than many travellers might need. He shows how Spain represents above all "the supreme manifestation of a certain primitive and eternal attitude of the human spirit, an attitude of heroic energy, of spiritual exaltation directed towards the fundamental facts of human existence"—not towards comfort or gain.
- Ellis, J: Breckenridge. Arkinsaw cousins: a story of the Ozarks. N. Y., Henry Holt & Co., 1908. c. 328 p. D. cl., $1.50.
A little town of southern Arkansas is the home of the Thornberry family, whose fortunes the story follows. The name included members both rich and poor and in widely different occupations, but clannish as a family and loyal to the claims of cousinships. Nothing startling nor dramatic is in the story. The neglected, sleepy little town, with its lazy and not unhappy characters, each one of whom is an original sketch, is well described, the happenings being such as occur to everyday people in everyday life. It is the writer's keen sense of humor, which is always kindly, that makes the story so readable.
- Ellis, J: Breckenridge. Twin Starrs: a novel. Bost., Mayhew Publishing Co., 1908. c. 215 p. D. cl., $1.
Yardell Buckney, a rich young man of Chicago, has two hobbies—the theatre and ancestry. He has been five years writing up his family history; a missing link sends him to Missouri for further information from a distant relative. Here he meets the "twin Starrs," two lovely girls, whose mother is on the stage, and a love story is the result. By the author of "Stork's nest," etc.

Intended to furnish an opportunity for a more intimate acquaintance with our American trees. The pictures upon the plates have in all cases been taken direct from nature and have been brought together in such a way that the non-botanical reader can recognize at a glance either the whole tree or the leaves, flowers, fruits or winter twigs, and thus be able to identify with ease and certainty any unknown tree to which his attention may be called. In the discussions of the text special attention has been given to the distinguishing characteristics of the various species, as well as to the more interesting phases of the yearly cycle of each and the special values of each for ornamental planting.

Olaf Jansen tells the story of his astounding discovery of the inner world—the hollow centre of the earth, inhabited by a race of gigantic and highly civilized people. In the identical centre of this vast vacuum is the seat of electricity—a mammoth ball of dull red fire, surrounded by a white, mild, luminous cloud, giving light to the country and known as the abode of the "smoky god." Openings at the poles of our world form the only entrances to the "inner world." The long-lost Garden of Eden is supposed to be situated in this marvelous "within" land.

- Evans, H. Ridgely. The house of the sphinx: a novel. Wash., D. C., Neale Publishing Co., 1907, [1908.] c. 219 p. D. cl., $1.50.
- A young American in London desiring to learn something of English country life and also in search of adventure answers an advertisement for an assistant in some chemical experiments at a private house in Sussex. His services are accepted and in a short time he finds himself at Wyndwood Hall—"the house of the sphinx," as he is led to call it. The host, an elderly man, is spending a fortune trying to turn the baser metals into gold. He is aided in his experiments by an Egyptian charlatan and his wife, who claim to have supernatural powers. There is a beautiful girl who is almost the victim of the Egyptian's admiration and whom the hero rescues. Many strange and apparently occult things happen before the dramatic ending in Egypt.

Ewald, Carl. The old room; tr. from the Danish by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. c. 3-317 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A happy couple in long past days had set aside a room in an old castle, never to be entered except by husband and wife and one servant to keep it tidy. The son of every generation pledged himself upon his marriage to keep the room for its purpose. Every couple also added a piece of furniture to the room. This story is of a couple, the husband of high ideals and grave views of life, the wife gay and full of love of pleasure and life, and one boy, torn between love of the unmated father and mother. A very subtle psychological study of the different meaning of married love to man and woman. Father and mother at last join in love for the son, but too late—the end is tragedy.

Author is professor of administrative law in the University of Michigan. Most of the present essays have been previously published in various magazines and journals or delivered before several societies. In arranging the essays an attempt has been made to group those most closely related. In the first group are those relating to problems of organization and the legal relation of cities to the state. In the second group are those dealing with municipal functions and activities. The third group presents some observations on municipal government in Europe made during a visit in the year 1906. The last essay, "Instruction in municipal government," is an independent essay, timely, instructive and comprehensive.

Farrell, Frank J. Dyeing and cleaning: a practical handbook; with 78 illustrations. Phil., Lippincott, 1908. 8+232 p. D. (Griffin's technological handbooks.) cl. (Add. pubs. for price.)

Author, sometime assistant lecturer in dyeing, Royal Technical Institute, Salford, England. While he has endeavored to justify the sub-title—"a practical handbook"—he has paid more attention to the general principles which govern the methods employed than to minute working details. "The latter," he says, "are superfluous to the practical man, and of little value to the beginner." In the chapter devoted to dyeing he has found it impracticable to mention more than a tithe of the coloring matters which are now available, therefore only one or two series of dyestuffs have been given as prototypes. Brief bibliography (½ p.).

Farrer, Reginald J. The ways of rebellion. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1908. 319 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

A character study of a beautiful English girl, daughter of the vicar of Holgarth. As a mere child she was bored by the world and its people, her own happiness, gained at any sacrifice of others, being her one thought. Michael Hallibon had known her all his life, feeling a sincere friendship for her. He resolves, however, after leaving Oxford to devote his life and wealth to the poor, and becomes a reformer and a socialist. The heroine marries a rich widower and a week after her wedding day offers herself to Michael, who repulses her. She returns to her husband, and commits in the years that follow many immoral and unconventional acts, but "the ways of rebellion," the author tells us, unexpectedly lead her "into perfect peace." By the author of "The Sundered stream."

Mr. Fernald is editor of "The students' standard dictionary." His purpose is to teach English grammar in what he believes to be a new, practical and popular manner. Recognizing the large number of persons who have not the time to study ponderous definitions and arguments, he has prepared what is, in every sense, a very concise and useful "working grammar." All that makes the study of grammar a mystery is eliminated, and the whole book is constructed so as to enable any intelligent person to find his own way, by its teachings, to a correct working knowledge of English.

The orphan heroine came with high ideals, much money and a heart yearning for sympathy and individual affection into the most ultra-fashionable society of New York City. A card sharper deceives her, gets her to give him half her fortune and takes her into such vile company among the fashionable set that she leaves him. Her views of divorce are given. She meets a good man, who proves a friend, and his best friend knows the villain of old and helps him get his deserts. The tone of New York frivolous society is given with realism.

"The present work is a continuation and enlargement of 'The true history of the American Revolution,' published some years ago in one volume. That work, while being a brief general account of the contest, dwelt more particularly on certain phases of the struggle which had been omitted or ignored by the historians. It soon became obvious that it did not go far enough, that the original plan should be extended and carried out in more detail, and that the whole mass of original evidence in libraries and historical societies should be made accessible and revealed to the public in as complete a manner as possible."—Preface.

The beliefs of unbelief: studies in the alternatives to faith. N. Y., Eaton & Mains, [1908.] c. '07. 64+203 p. D. cl., *$1.25 net.

The Australian Wesleyan minister, author of "The unrealized logic of religion," etc., says that the new unbelief does not deny; does not affirm; it would describe its own mood as a state of mental equipoise. But "to justify the alleged equipoise of doubt, not only the forces for faith and against it, but for doubt and against it must be ascertained and assessed." These papers attempt to define and assess the positions of doubt first by stating the Christian faith about God, Christ and the Bible, then examining the alternative doctrines advanced to-day. In short, it is an appraisal of the "evidences" of irreligion.

The author of "How England saved Europe" treats of the last days of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette and the rise of "the little Corsican." The story leaves Napoleon still First Consul. It is told by "the pawn in the game," a young Englishman who met Napoleon first at a military school in France. The Egyptian campaign of 1795 is described fully and the days of imprisonment of "the pawn" while gathering information for Egypt, where he was attached to the foreign service.

Fitzhugh, T. Prolegomena to the history of Italic-Romanic rhythm. Charlottesville, Va., Anderson Bros., 1908. c. 22 p. O. pap., 25 c.

Author is professor of Latin in the University of Virginia. The investigation upon which these results are based has nothing to do with the particular question as to the nature of the Latin accent. It shows merely that, whatever be its precise tone, Latin accent falls rhythmically in Latin speech, and thus determines for the native versification an original rhythm of accent, and not as in Greek with its arhythmic accent and original rhythm of quantity.—Introduction.

The story of Josiah Flynt Willard's life told by himself. He was the son of educated, respectable people, but the fascination of a tramp's life was irresistible to him. He tramped and wrote books under the name of Josiah Flynt, his books being almost entirely, if not entirely, composed of his own experiences "on the road." He tramped all over this country and Europe, and when not consorting with the lowest order of tramps was visiting Tolstoy or Ibsen or some other eccentric genius. This book begins with his earliest recollections, ending with his death. A friend tells of his last days.

"Corrie" meets us as the paid companion of an elderly female villain who has taken charge of her since her early youth. Corrie remembers an old house in the lower western part of New York City where she hopes to hear something of her history, and much of the story tells of her search for this house. Little by little the mystery of her story is cleared up, and a very charming boy with whom she has played in early youth helps to make many things clear and solves the "Who" which has so long worried poor Corrie.

Foster, W. Trufant. Argumentation and debating. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., [1908.] c. 18+486 p. D. cl., $1.25 net.

Author is professor of English and debating in Bowdoin College. Presents the essentials of the subject, simply following the order in which the difficulties arise in actual practice. The point of view is that of the student; the amount of practical material is larger than usual in manuals of this kind. Author claims there can be no better training for citizenship than a capacity for getting at both sides of a subject and learning to respect opinions that differ if they are founded on logical reasons.

Trusts, combinations and syndicates have for years extorted from trade and industry hundreds of millions of illegitimate profits upon watered stocks and wrecked homes. Not only the general public, but the national government has been continually robbed by these manipulators of finance. It is the author's desire to present to the readers, in the plainest and most simple language at his command, the quickest, best and most effective remedy, also a clearer and better comprehension of a just and equitable financial system.

An unsensational story of English country life told in the witty and amusing style that made "Concerning Isabel Carnaby" famous. Miss Fallowfield as a young girl desired riches beyond everything else. Her fortune comes to her through the death of the man she is engaged to. The book takes up her life twenty years afterward; she is still unmarried, having with her a charming young niece. Both women have had many admirers, but rarely disinterested ones—their money being the great attraction. At last both are loved for themselves alone. Miss Fallowfield's marriage ends with the honeymoon—the question still remaining of the disposal of her fortune.

Just on the borderland of Kentucky and Virginia soar the mountains where this story is laid, of bitter family feuds, the raiding of illicit whiskey stills, the booming of real estate, the laying out and improving of towns, and the breaking in of the wild mountaineers to the law and order decreed by states, cities and towns. June, a wild, loyal child of the woods, pleases an enterprising engineer, who takes her under his guardianship, educates her, and almost loses her, so loyal is she to the old family traditions of hate and revenge.

in the Johns Hopkins University. Of the addresses contained in this entertaining and scholarly volume one on "newspapers and exact thinking" was delivered at the Johns Hopkins commencement in 1895; the second was a memorial address on Prof. James Joseph Sylvester, 1895; the third, on "A defect of public discussion in America," was delivered to the Johns Hopkins Alumni, of Chicago, in 1899. An article on "The intellectual powers of woman" is reprinted from the North American Review. There are 61 editorial articles upon timely topics of the period 1894-1908. These are chronologically arranged and have permanent value as indicating fairly well the views of thoughtful and conservative persons upon various local, national and foreign topics. Some of the articles deal instructively with economic, educational, scientific, moral, sociological and literary questions of general interest.

Describes the nature and action of the various mechanical and other contrivances, and endeavors to trace them as well as the traditions, legends and general folk-lore of the lower races to their origins in remote prehistoric times. Ample scope is afforded for much speculation and some theories are advanced disputed by some anthropologists. Evolution in the Darwinian sense is at the root of all this speculative matter. The author, nephew of Dr. Bodinus, passed his early days in the Berlin Zoological Gardens, where he came in constant contact with primitive peoples.

The aim of the book is to give facts for the practical information of the voter, without argument either for or against any theory or proposal of reform. The history of elections and of election laws has been drawn upon only so far as it seemed necessary to make clear why certain features of the election system exist and how they operate.

Susan had the reputation of having been a flirt before her marriage, but a friend probably described her more truly, when she said she was "feather-headed." A lack of intelligence rather than design, brings about the series of events, which Susan started with a slight misrepresentation, fearing to arouse her husband's jealousy. It effects seriously the progress of a man's love affair, and makes Susan's life miserable, as she is in constant fear of being found out. The scene is New York City. The amusing little story comes from the author of "The Thinking Machine."

The "Thinking Machine" is Prof. F. X. Van Deusen, whose specialty is omniscience and who undertakes to solve by abstract logic every problem that is brought to him. His friend Hatch, a reporter, keeps him well supplied with facts on all subjects. One day the body of a man in the uniform of a French naval officer is thrown up by a motor boat in Boston Harbor. To explain this "case" takes the Professor many days and makes an exciting detective story.

From 67 writers of English, ranging from De Bury to Agnes Replier, these selections of "humanity essays" on books and what they stand for in the life of the world, have been made. The editors have passed by all platitudes and trite quotations and in every instance have given enough of extract to show illuminating context; and have also included 13 complete essays by De Bury, Bacon, Addison, Lamb, Stevenson, Gissing, Leigh Hunt, Emerson, Thoreau, Henry Ward Beecher, Washington Irving and Benjamin Franklin. Very nice yet wholly Catholic judgment has culled these words on books from thinkers who were, above all, idealists and lovers of man.

In the Austrian Tyrol Alois Harz, an artist of peasant birth, falls in love with Christian Devorell, an English girl. The opposition of her self-indulgent step-father, money-loving uncle, and affected aunt is increased by the discovery that Harz belonged in his youth to a society of Anarchists, escaped from the hands of the police, and is still liable to arrest while he remains in the country. Christian's step-father finally notifies the authorities of his whereabouts, but Harz escapes, with the unexpected help of the uncle. Eventually the hero and heroine marry and live comfortably in England.

The story opens in Washington and introduces Marshall Treemon, a self-made man and newly appointed Senator, in love with Victoria Wemyss, daughter of Lord Wemyss, the British ambassador. It is soon made evident that there is a bar to this attachment involving a secret connected with Treemon's parentage which he seeks to track down, going to New York for that purpose and living for a time on the East Side among a band of socialists. One of them, an attractive woman, has been involved in the past with a young English captain, who had in London become betrothed to Victoria Wemyss before her coming to America. But the Senator wins the English girl just as the secret of his life threatens to ruin his hopes.

The author tells the history of thirty-one of England's most famous abbeys. The legends and miracles of their saints, the days of their splendor and power when their religious life was woven into the ruling of England, followed by the age of their misfortune, when, first sacked by Henry VIII. for their treasure, then used as quarries by the country side to mend roads and ditches. They now stand many mere ruins for the tourist. The artist, Warwick Goble, follows this story with many illustrations, done in colors, picturing their "cliffs of walls nested in the gentle English landscape."

As a character of romance George Villiers, first Duke of Buckingham, has scarcely an equal in English history of the Stuart period. Not only his handsome face and dashing manners made him a conspicuous figure, but he had shining qualities along with many shortcomings. His power over men is shown in the fact that he held the position of king's favorite in two reigns—that of James I. and that of his son, Charles I. He was, in fact, a great adventurer whose intrigues and exploits have served as material for more than one historical romance. List of authorities (1 p.). Index. Edward Singleton, a man of education and force, is sent out to Kentucky to look after large land interests. In the house in which he boards lives an attractive but uneducated country girl, Nancy Jane, in whom he takes a kindly interest. He tries to advance her intellectually and finally advises her father to send her to a school in Nashville. Her sweetheart, a Kentucky boy, is at first indignant at Singleton's "interference," but finally comes to realize his unselfish motives and asks for help in his own studies. The renewal of an old romance between Singleton's mother and a Kentucky major is also introduced, and ends happily, while Singleton himself finally marries a beautiful Southern girl, whom Nancy Jane brings home from Nashville.

Goodrich, Arthur F: Gleam o' dawn: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. c. 308 p. il. D. cl., †$1.50.

The story has for a background the woods on the Canadian border. The hero is the son of a white man and an Indian woman, who has dedicated his life to revenging his mother's wrongs. His father deserted his mother when he was a baby, leaving her to die of a broken heart. It is her name that gives title to the story. The father had settled enough money on the boy to give him a European education and develop his artistic talents. When the reader meets him as Dan Smith he is under the lure of the woods, seeking inspiration for new pictures. He finds a girl to love here and meets his father, the end being tragedy.

The Bishop of Fond Du Lac is one of the most ritualistic bishops in the Protestant Episcopal church of America. He inscribes his work to Pearson, Hooker and Pusey, "three great theologians of the Ecclesia Anglicana." A carefully arranged guide through the creed and beliefs of the "high church" ritual, by which the priests may properly instruct their people in the beliefs of the Anglican Church which the author believes is now "being roused to her great, providentially protected and designed mission." He believes "the systems developed by the human spirit of sects and papacy will be scorched up in the divine light and the church will finally be purified."

Mr. Graham is already familiar to readers as the author of two entertaining books relating to the Scotland of the Eighteenth Century, and his death in 1906 was regretted by a wide literary circle. The present volume contains a series of essays mainly relating to social life in Scotland in the olden time, supplemented by three chapters descriptive of France before the Revolution which throw much light on the catastrophe which succeeded that time.

The adventures of a somewhat flighty mole who lives with a genial and resourceful water-rat, who introduces him to animal society along the river bank. Their friend Toad of Toad Hall causes them much anxiety by constantly breaking the speed laws with his motor-car. Mr. Badger, a wise, if somewhat crusty person, proves a great help to them in their difficulties. The book, while written for children, will interest older readers, as did the author's "Dream days" and "The golden age."

Story opens in London among money lenders, gamblers, book-makers, aristocrats of ruined fortunes and low morals. The mystery is the murder of a young woman who had been cast aside by the rich money lenders. Tracing the murderer leads to much circumstantial evidence implicating people in several walks of life. The heroine is devoted to a blind father, who has also been foolish in his day.

Belisarius was the greatest general of the Byzantine Empire, born about 500. After winning many campaigns for Justinian, his emperor, he is falsely accused of treason, his wife, who wishes to be rid of him, giving the testimony upon which he is disgraced and his sight taken from him. His only son is spirited away, and it is his search for the boy—blind and penniless—through the world that is the subject of the poem. Author is rector of Church of the Ascension, New York City.

This account of Sir Richard Granville, who was "the King's General in the west" during the principal part of the Great Rebellion in the seventeenth century, has already to a large extent appeared in "A history of the Granville family," which was privately printed by the Rev. Roger Granville, sub dean of Exeter Cathedral, in 1895. It is hoped, however, that this brief sketch of his life will reach a wider circle of readers and fill up a gap in modern studies of that interesting period of English history. Sir Richard Granville was an adherent to the royal cause, and his character has been the subject of attack and vindication from the days of Clarendon on.
- Gratacap, L. Pope. The evacuation of England: the twist in the Gulf Stream. N. Y., Brentano's, 1908. c. 321 p. D. cl., †$1.25.
The author of "The centantry of a future life in Mars" and "A woman of the ice age" again indulges his imagination to picture what would happen if the Isthmus of Panama sank into the sea and the Gulf stream of the Atlantic ocean flowed into the Pacific. He pictures the changes of geology, climate, physical and political geography that would result throughout the world. England would be too cold to live in and its evacuation organized by King Edward VII. is described. The king reaches Australasia and finds himself again king "by popular vote." Under this ingenious skit the author shows his knowledge of science and contemporary human problems.

"In bringing Dr. Asa Gray's well-known manual to date and into accord with modern views of classification and nomenclature, the present editors have found it necessary to rearrange it throughout, rewrite considerable portions, modify at least slightly nearly all the descriptions, and adopt certain principles of nomenclature (notably the one relating to the first specific name) somewhat at variance with Dr. Gray's practice. Haggard, H. Rider. A farmer's year: being his commonplace book for 1898; with 2 maps and 36 il. by G. Leon Little. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1906, [1908.] 24+489 p. D. (Silver lib.) cl., $1.50.

The real diary of a real farm—a farm that is made to pay, not a fancy place for elaborate experiments. The various condition of English farming, the problems of laborers, land and crops are dealt with, and much practical, though not technical, information is given, but the chief charm of the book lies in the exquisite descriptions of rustic scenery through all its changes, from the time when "one crocus opened its golden cup on the slope of the lawn bank," till the days of December sunrises, "crouching to drive a painter mad with envy and despair."

A collection of short stories having a certain cohesion, as they are all of the sea, some of the characters being made use of in several incidents. The scene throughout is laid in the region of the Florida Keys. The hero, the giant mate of the wrecking sloop, is brave and daring, figuring in many exciting escapades while plying his desperate trade. Author of "The black barque," etc.

Hainsselin, M. T. The Isle of Maids: a romance of the Mediterranean. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 308 p. cl., †$1.50.

After leaving Oxford two young Englishmen, with ample means, plan a novel excursion to obtain rest and a fresh set of ideas. They seek an uninhabited isle in the Aegean archipelago where they can play Robinson Crusoe, and set out at once in their yacht. The isle they select for the experiment, and which they believe to be uninhabited, they discover in a very dramatic way is the temporary home of six young girls of modern Greece, whose fathers own the isle and have made it comfortable for them to live the simple life for a few months in the summer. They dress in Greek costumes and indulge in all kinds of outdoor sports. The men's yacht is stolen and the girls are obliged to let them remain for a time on the island. A good deal of love making results.

Rotation period of the sun has been determined by three independent methods: 1, from measurements of the motions of the spots in longitude; 2, from measurements of the motions of the faculae in longitude; 3, from spectroscopic measurements of the motion of the line of sight of the approaching and receding limbs. Monochromatic photographs made with the spectroheliograph of the Kentwood Observatory in the years 1902-04 provided material for a new determination of the rotation period. A grant from the Carnegie Institution has made it possible to undertake the measurement of plates of the Yerkes Observatory. The results of this investigation are contained in the present pamphlet.

Half-smart (The) set: a novel; with 3 il in color by Armand Both. N. Y., Frederick A Stokes Co., [1908] c. 311 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Although published anonymously, the novel is said to be the work of a successful novelist, who, for some unknown reason, conceals his name. The people it deals with have all the riches and pleasures of the "smart set" of London without being in it. They are somewhat fast and vulgar. The only unmarried daughter of the family—Patricia—is the heroine of the story. She and a young Oxford man fall deeply in love at sight and marry in haste. Both are dependent on their fathers for means to live. Patricia is a complex character, with as many faults as virtues. The story of their marriage is rather startling.

"The present paper is the result of a systematic study by the author of those Southern California plants belonging to the family of composite, and its aim is to present in an intelligible form our present knowledge of this group as it occurs within the area indicated. Only two attempts to classify and describe the composite flora of Southern California have previously been made by Dr. Asa Gray, in connection with works of a much larger scope. These works having been published something over twenty years ago, and much additional knowledge having accumulated during the interval, it seemed advisable that some such revision as the present one aims to be should be undertaken. It is the result of over six years' study . . ."—Introduction

Hallock, Ella B., and Gilbert, C. B. Some living things: primary lessons in physiology. N. Y., A. S. Barnes & Co., 1908. c. 13+214 p. il. D. cl., 36 c.

Ella B. Hallock was formerly State Institute instructor in physiology and hygiene in New York and Massachusetts. This is the plan followed in "Some living things." The child is not forced to memorize statements of scientific facts, admirably correct, but to him meaningless. He is shown the paw of a dog, the claw of a bird, and from them he learns that his own foot, too, is made up of joints worked by cords and muscles. He is taught, also, that as it is a delicately arranged mechanism it must be properly cared for, that tight and ill-fitting shoes prevent it from properly doing its work. Thus it is not merely knowledge of facts but their application to his life which this book seeks to impress upon the child.

Hamilton, Cecily Mary. Diana of Dobson's. N. Y., Century Co., 1908. c. 362 p. front. D. cl., *$1.50.

Diana is a London shop-girl, pretty and clever, and wildly rebellious against the grayness and narrowness of her life. Then most unexpectedly she inherits three hundred pounds. Instead of safely investing her tiny fortune she decides to spend every penny of it in a month of glorious fun. She goes to Paris for pretty dresses and makes a trip to Switzerland, and has two love affairs. At last returns to London, penniless, to look for a new situation. One of the admirers she had turned her back upon meets her in a desperate moment in London, her romance ending very satisfactorily.

Author is professor of the history and the art of teaching in Harvard University. The contents of the book fall into two groups: the first dealing specifically with the problems of industrial education in this country, and the second treating of some of the results that have been obtained in the secondary schools of Germany. The papers are for the most part practical rather than theoretical, and embody in clear, strong and useful forms the results of the actual experience and investigations of the author. Professor Hanus's position as Chairman of the Massachusetts State Commission on Industrial Education gives a particular weight to his utterances on this question.

Forbes' play has run more than 2000 times. It is the story of a girl who is engaged to her father's stableman, who goes on the stage because she can earn more to help her parents. Her younger sister is roused to do likewise. She is of weaker nature and almost falls a victim to a man whose money is helping out her sister's lover. The character of the older sister and the New York life of the play are well pictured in the novel also.

The plot of the novel is the same as the play. It is the story of a young clerk who marries on a very small salary and failing to get a raise robs his employer. His employer is an utterly unscrupulous man, who admires the young clerk's pretty wife. When the clerk's thefts are discovered he sends his wife to plead for him with his employer. The ending is dramatic.

Harker, Mrs. Lizzie Allen. His first leave. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. 8+309 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A young Englishman just starting for Indian Civil Service is much concerned about the bestowal of books inherited from his guardian, a dearly loved scholar of Oxford. On the train he meets a girl of fourteen, who makes friends and invites him to see her father, also devoted to books, who will give the treasures shelter. This girl becomes the mainspring of the hero's varying fortunes. Upon "his first leave" he finds her grown, the light of the eyes to relations of his, and he decides to let India and his Indian history go and settle down in a beautiful English shire with his bright, helpful womanly wife.

Harker, Mrs. Lizzie Allen. Miss Esperance and Mr. Wycherly. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. c. 327 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Miss Esperance, a lovable maiden lady, and Mr. Wycherly, an elderly and scholarly bachelor, take upon themselves the bringing up of two orphan boys. The problems that arise in their training, the difficulties with questions of religion and education, habits and behavior, are solved by the two guardians in their own quaint and original way. The people of the little Scotch town are sketched with rare sense of fun, and the escapades of the boys are most amusing. By the author of "Concerning Paul and Fiametta."

Harraden, Beatrice. Interplay. N. Y., Frederick A. Stokes Co., [1908.] c. 384 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A romantic love story by the author of "Ships that pass in the night." Harriet Rivers, a very attractive woman and an exceptionally fine musician, who has been divorced from a most undesirable husband, is deeply loved by Captain Bending, a famous Arctic explorer. She lives in a charming London house with her companion, Margaret Tressider, who also finds a sincere admirer in Dr. Edgar, a physician of high repute. There are few intense incidents, the title indicating the main purpose of the story—the influence that one character has upon another and the effect that such influence has on the actual happenings of life. The problems of woman suffrage and of woman activities in general are brought into the story.

"The objects of this expedition," the author says, "were to penetrate as far as possible into that unknown region which lies to the north, and to meet and to get to know the natives, of whom I have always fostered an idea of making use in ice expeditions. Besides the natives, the whale-fishers who navigate those waters, might, I trusted, be able to render me assistance. Furthermore, I wished to discover, if possible, whether there was land hitherto unknown in the Arctic Ocean; in ascertaining this I would make Herschel Island my base of operations." He believes now from the results of his expedition that the grand project of Arctic travellers to reach the Pole, is fully feasible.

Harrison, Mrs. Constance Cary, [Mrs. Burton Harrison.] The count and the congressman; il. by Alex. O. Levy. N. Y., Cupples & Leon Co., [1908.] c. 300 p. D. cl., 75 c. Margot Methuen, the daughter of Augustin Methuen, a former millionaire, is in love with Count Stelvio, an Italian of an old but impoverished family. The dire need of her parents forces Margot into an engagement with August MacPhail, a millionaire congressman, who invites her family to stay at their old home, which he has bought. The father is too ill to realize where he is taken, but before his death Margot discovers that he deeply distrusts MacPhail. She learns also that MacPhail is largely responsible for the loss of their fortune, is dishonest and unscrupulous. The engagement is broken, Stelvio appears once more, and all ends well.

The time is in the first years of William III.'s reign, when England is fearing an uprising of the followers of the Pretender James II., the Catholic Prince. France is threatening to send an invading army to England, when Captain Cassilis is ordered to Devonshire to Castle Cleeve to arrest a man thought to be an emissary of the French king. Cassilis is a soldier of fortune, recklessly brave and imperious. My Lady of Cleeve is proud and beautiful and alone in the castle with only her servants. The young couple, of course, fall in love, and a stormy courtship is the result. Many romantic adventures are interwoven in the story.

This scholarly monograph describes 266 species of the fossil turtles of North America; 76 of these are of especial interest as having been hitherto unknown to science. The utmost carefulness has been observed both in text and illustrations, for both of which the author is especially indebted to the collection of fossil turtles in the American Museum of Natural History in New York. Free access has also been given Professor Hay to other leading museums in the country and it was his wish to see all types of the hitherto described species, but some of these are totally lost, while some others have, for the time, disappeared from view. The various types of species here represented are minutely depicted.

Hayes, Hiram W.; Paul Anthony, Christian: a tale of truth. Bost., Reid Publishing Co., [1908.] c. '07, '08. 10+415 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The heroine, a young English girl, is engaged to marry a clergyman starting as missionary for Africa. He dies and she decides to devote her life to mission work. In Africa she meets Paul Anthony, a successful business man, who finds time to devote himself to the spread of Christian science. The heathen make strange criticism of the Christian missionaries' doctrines, but they are satisfied with the truth as taught by the great "healer," who explains the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's "Science and health" to meet all circumstances. Romance is secondary to the religious purpose of the story.

The little heroine, left an orphan at an early age, is brought up by two hard-hearted old spinster step-sisters, who always find fault with her and constantly recall her dependence on them in a most cruel manner. The child is imaginative and imbibes from old books of her young mother many odd fancies of knights and fairies, evil spirits, etc., which she applies to her wicked step-sisters and other bad people who she believes have been enchanted. The book opens with her young mother's love story, and the acts of her father's cruel uncle which broke her mother's heart. The little heroine finally conquers this "enchanted" great-uncle.

From the president of Wellesley College and author of "Narragansett ballads," etc. The little book contains forty Lenten sonnets, an Interlude of fifteen poems, and eight final sonnets, forming a Cycle of Grief over the death of a friend. All the sonnets are profoundly religious in spirit and marked by fine feeling. The Lenten sonnets begin with Ash-Wednesday, and follow the penitential season, ending with a sonnet for each day of Passion Week, and one for Easter Day. The title is taken from a poem of Sir Walter Raleigh. Printed on one side of leaf only.

Hazeltine, Horace. The city of encounters; il. by Harry Stacey Benton. N. Y., Mitchell Kennerley, [1908.] c. 384 p. pls. 12°, cl., $1.50.

The City of Encounters is New York. A young Hawaiian wrecked in Indiana on his way to join a rich uncle in Boston gets to New York with a bag handed him by the Pullman porter at time of the accident. At the Hotel Astor he opens this bag and finds it contains United States bills to the value of upwards of $300,000. On the mystery of where this money came from, and all his encounters with reporters, detectives, bank assistants, hotel guests, etc., hang the tale. Two sisters, closely resembling each other furnish the romantic element.

The chief object of this volume is to place before the connoisseur—the author uses the word in its widest sense—a historical account of the art of miniature which shall be suggestive and stimulating to further study and appreciation, rather than an exhaustive catalogue or an authoritative guide for the specialist. In the illustrations, which are an especial feature, will be recognized at once the value of color. Another important feature of the illustrations is the fact that all the reproductions are produced exactly the same size as the original miniatures. Bibliography (6 p.).

The second paper was only completed by Mr. Herbert a few days before his death in November, 1906. He had planned to circulate this summary of the Voluntaryist creed for signature by those who agreed with it. The creed is that the individual must gain his own rightful freedom, become master of himself, determined to end the profitless and worn-out system of restrictions and compulsions. It impresses the waste and the folly of striving against each other and to gaining victories over each other. It teaches true freedom must lead to universal peace.

This novel is a study of married life in the United States to-day. The scene shifts from an inland town to St. Louis, then to New York, with intervals of rest on a farm in Vermont. The husbands devoted wholly to business, the wives wholly to selfish pleasures, the unrest, the physical ill-health, the moral dangers of this plan of living are described in boldest language. Incidentally the great railroad trusts, the specialist physicians, the vast hotels are graphically pictured. That man and woman are both to blame for the circumstances from which both suffer is the keynote.

Author was former Associate Editor of The Ladies' Home Journal. It is a condensed account of the actual experiences of actual mothers. The author believes in heredity, physical, moral and mental, and wishes to impress upon her readers how every condition of body and mind may have consequences in future years.

Hewlett, Maurice H. Halfway House: a comedy of degrees. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. c. 6+3-424 p. D. cl., $1.50.

In this book Mr. Hewlett gives for the first time a novel of the life of to-day in England. Social life in London and the country furnish him with his background, out of which he develops the story of a governess, who marries a man of higher position and much older than herself. Through a recent arrangement the works of Maurice Hewlett, formerly published by the Macmillan Co., will hereafter be published by the Scribners, who will also bring out the future works of Hewlett.

A story of Spain in 1860; tells how an English squire travelling for pleasure met with strange and tragic adventures; the phlegmatic temperament of the Englishman is brought into strong and vivid contrast with the hot blood of the Spaniard. Author of "The forest lovers," etc.

Heylin, H: Brougham. The cotton weaver's handbook: a practical guide to the construction and casting of cotton fabrics, with studies of designs; with 358 illustrations. Phil., Lippincott, 1908. 10+326 p. D. cl., *$2.50 net.

Author belongs to the Royal Technical Institute, Salford. His main object in writing this work have been—first, in the interests of technical education; secondly, to place before the reader and student—by simple methods of description and in as compact a handbook as possible—the principles and conditions under which cotton goods are respectively constructed and produced.

Heyse, Paul Johann Ludwig. Er soll dein heyr sein; ed., with introd., notes, exercises and vocabulary, by Martin H. Haertel. N. Y., American Book Co., [1908.] c. 106 p. S. cl., 30 c.

Editor is instructor in German in the University of Wisconsin. This is one of Heyse's short stories, written in 1873, when his art of writing short stories had reached its full development. It gives a picture of life in a small Bavarian town not far from Munich. The time is that of the Franco-Prussian war.

Hichens, Rob. Smythe. Egypt and its monuments; il. by Jules Guerin and with photographs. N. Y., Century Co., 1908. c. 10+272 p. Q. cl., $6 net, boxed.

Nowhere in literature is there to be read a more sympathetic description of the wonders to be seen upon the Nile journey than in this volume by the author of "The garden of Allah." Mr. Hichens has avoided the guide-book style of writing and has confined himself to setting forth the color, picturesque, wonder and mystery which characterizes the monuments of Egypt. The twenty pictures by Jules Guerin, in full color, convey the immensity and the color impressions of these wonders of the past. The color pictures are supplemented by about forty full-page reproductions of photographs.

Hichens, Rob. Smythe. The green carnation. N. Y., Mitchell Kennerley, 1908. c. 211 p. 8°, cl., $1.

First published by D. Appleton & Co. in 1894. Every one recognized the clever satire of decadent tendencies in a rather prominent English literary and social circle. In this new issue the publisher identifies the characterizations with their prototypes, among whom were Oscar Wilde, Sir Charles Wyndham, a picture of Dorian Gray and the Criterion Theatre.

Hichens, Rob. Smythe. A spirit in prison; il. by Cyrus Cuneo. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. '07, '08. 3-664 p. D. cl., $1.75.

A sequel to "The call of the blood," at the same time a complete story in itself. Sixteen years have elapsed since Maurice Delarcy, after betraying his wife for a young peasant girl, met his death by a fall into the sea, leaving Hermione, his wife, with her unborn child, ignorant of his treachery and brokenhearted at his loss. The present scene is in Italy, on a small island in the bay just outside of Naples. Hermione is living here with her child Vere, now a charming girl of sixteen. Vere makes acquaintance with a young Sicilian named Ruffo, whose identity is slowly made known. Hermione has been loved for years by a man in every way worthy of her, but has remained faithful to her husband's memory. When the truth is told everything is changed with her.

Higgins, Aileen Cleveland. Thekla: a drama. Bost., Poet Lore Co., [Richard G. Badger.] 1908. c. 62 p. 12°, $1.

Thekla is a noble maiden of Iconium; her mother has arranged a suitable marriage for her, but coming under the influence of the Apostle Paul she dedicates her life to the Christian's God. The scene changes from Iconium to Antioch. Alexander, the high priest, first sees Thekla there at a festival. She resents his admiration and is condemned to the arena, where the wild beasts refuse to touch her. Alexander is so deeply impressed that he releases and pardons Thekla.

When the Russians first came to the Island of Unalaska they were told a vast country lay to the Eastward and that its name was Al-ay-ek-sa. This name means "the great country." The author has made repeated visits to Alaska and she gives an exhaustive description of everything worth seeing in our vast Northern territory and many valuable statistics of its resources and people. She believes this great country will soon be the most popular tourist resort of the American continent. Freely illustrated with half-tones from photographs.

A companion volume to the author's "Three weeks in Europe," being a practical guide book for the amateur traveller. The author takes the Dutch towns as he saw them, enumerates the points of interest in each, with critical remarks, and gives any historical fact connected with it. All the Rubens and Rembrandt pictures are listed in the right places, and all the celebrated churches and cathedrals are mentioned, with an interesting bit of gossip. The rapid way in which the writer travelled is shown by his itinerary. The illustrations are taken from life.

A complete and authoritative short history of the arts of engraving and etching. The author is an authority on the subject, and has enjoyed special facilities in his researches, being connected with the Department of Engravings of the British Museum. He tells the story of the development of engraving from the earliest times to the present, giving brief summaries and characterizations of the work of all the important engravers. The book is largely illustrated with 109 text illustrations from famous engravings of all ages, and a photogravure frontispiece. Its arrangement has been carefully planned for the convenience of collectors and students. Appendix 1, Classified list of engravings; 2, General bibliography (20 p.); 3, Index of engravers and individual bibliography.

The narrative in this little volume might be called a collection of short sketches illustrating the great events of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, with Winkelreid as their dominant figure and connecting link. The author tells of the legends which cluster around Pilatus and good Father Vincentius's thrilling story of the battle of Morgarten. He shows how a mystery play was performed. The ravages of the "black death" are vividly set forth, etc., closing the graphic story with an account of the famous Sempach battle and Winkelreid's courageous death.

The present volume has grown from an interest in "The ring and the book," originating years ago in the instruction of Professor Hiram Corson, of Cornell University. By the courtesy of Balliol College the author was accorded the privilege of free access to Browning's treasure trove, of which they have the unique copy. The work is designed primarily to place side by side the crude raw material of the Old Yellow Book and the completed art product, "The ring and the book," one of the most potent and masterful creative undertakings in English poetry since Shakespeare. The author needed means for his great undertaking and therefore gave its publication to the Carnegie Institution.

Hopkins, Rev. Herbert Müller. Priest and pagan. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1908. c. 8+3-373 p front. D. cl., †$1.50.

The "priest" is the rector of a mission parish in the Bronx, the halfwooded suburb of New York City: the "pagan" is a rich young New York man of scholarly tastes and brilliant capabilities, but wholly lacking moral purpose. These two are brought together on the day when the "pagan" returns to New York under an assumed name, having been mourned as dead for a year, and sets about to make a new life for himself. A lovely though undisciplined daughter of an impoverished family becomes the woman in the case, and the story with its glimpses of Bronx landmarks, now fast disappearing, shows the development of character in each man, one faulty but sincerely religious, the other conscienceless and frankly pagan. Author is rector of the Church of the Holy Nativity in the Bronx, and has also written "The mayor of Warwick."

The author is of General J. E. B. Stuart's Cavalry, 6th Virginia Regiment, C. S. A. For years he told his son about his experiences as a soldier in General Lee's army from 1861 to 1865, and when the boy was older he wanted these stories published. They have been made a little less personal than as first told, but are still full of little details of greatest interest. Mr. Hopkins was only 17 at the outbreak of the Civil War so took "a boy's view" of the struggle. He has lived for the last 30 years in Baltimore.

Resembles the author's "Camp-fires in the Canadian Rockies" in size, type and general appearance. In this volume he tells the story of an expedition which he and a party of friends made from Tucson, Arizona, across the desert to the hitherto unknown region surrounding Pinacate in northwestern Mexico. As a narrative of unique experiences in the trackless desert of southern Arizona and in the rugged and uncharted mountains of northwestern Mexico, the book will appeal to all lovers of the free out-of-door life. The marvellous varieties of animal and plant life encountered, the adventures of the party in the pursuit of big game, give the book a rare quality.

Hornblow, Arthur. The profligate: a novel; il. by C: Grunwald. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., [1908] c. 9-383 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The hero is left when a babe on the doorstep of a rich New Yorker, who grows so attached to him that he adopts him and makes a will in his favor. He gives the boy every advantage of education, but the boy neglects his studies, seeks bad company, and becomes a gambler. He is turned out of his adopted father's house and left to his own devices. He goes from bad to worse, and when one night his adopted father is murdered he is arrested and tried as the murderer. He proves an alibi and escapes, but is shunned by everybody. He reforms his life, goes abroad, meets a good woman, who believes in him—but refuses to marry her till he has found the real murderer. His search reveals the man in a prominent lawyer who is wholly unsuspected. By the author of "The end of the game," etc.

Hotchkiss, Chauncey Crafts. A prisoner of the sea; il. by Bert Knight. N. Y., John McBride Co., 1908. c. 260 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A young American doing business in Havana one day realizes that his partner, a Cuban, who suddenly disappears, has robbed him of all his capital. He is obliged at once to take a situation, and finds a place as first mate on board an elegantly fitted yacht, which he is led to suppose is private property. From the start things seem very mysterious to him, but for many chapters he is left in suspense, as is the reader likewise. A lady comes aboard at one of the stopping places, bringing the elements of romance needed to offset the violent acts in which the yacht becomes involved. The climax is most unlooked for, as is the finding of the mate's stolen fortune.

Houck, L. A history of Missouri, from the earliest explorations and settlements until the admission of the state into the union. [In 3 v.] Chic., R. R. Donnelley & Sons Co., 1908. c. 18+404; 8+418; 10+380 p. O. cl., $18, boxed.

The interesting material embodied in this work represents a labor of love, made during a busy and active life. The author aimed to collect every important fact relating to the early history of Missouri, especially in the years before it became a state, a part of its history generally ignored by historians. The searchers after gold, the Canadian voyageurs and coureurs des bois, the self-sacrificing missionaries, and the few bands of roving Indians all play an important and picturesque part in these early scenes. Many biographical sketches with portraits of the distinguished men of colonial and territorial Missouri will be found woven in the narrative. The three closely-printed volumes bear witness to the comprehensiveness of the history. The author's authorities are given on every page.

Houdini, Harry. The unmasking of Robert Houdin. N. Y., Conjurers Magazine Publishing Co., 1908. c. '06, '07, '08. 318 p. D. cl., $2.

Robert Houdin, a French conjurer and mechanician, was b. 1805; d. 1871. He began a series of juggling exhibitions in 1845, and became well known throughout the world for his clever tricks. He wrote his memoirs claiming credit for many tricks and automata, which it is said marked the golden age in magic. The object of the present book is to tell the true story of Robert Houdin's career, which the author seeks to prove was one of unscrupulousness from beginning to end.

The long life of George Bancroft (1800-1891) almost covered the nineteenth century; and during the greater part of it, as scholar, historian, statesman and diplomatist, he had a wider personal acquaintance with the great figures among his contemporaries than perhaps any other American. The biography is based upon the great mass of Mr. Bancroft's diaries, letters and papers placed by his family in Mr. Howe's hands some time after his death. Aside from the work being a biography of unusual interest and importance, it is a unique contribution to the whole personal history of the time. It contains descriptions of Student life at Göttingen, 1818-1820; Visits to Goethe and to Wolf and Humboldt; Travels in Italy and France; Meetings with Lord Byron, Lafayette, Thorwaldsen; His experience as Secretary of the Navy; Minister to England in 1846; Visit to Paris in 1847-49, and anecdotes of Guizot, Lamartine, Benjamin Constant and Louis Philippe; Minister to Germany, 1867-1874; Intimate friendship with von Moltke, Bismarck and Emperor William I.; Anecdotes of Thiers, the Empress Eugenie, etc. Bibliography (11 p.). Howells, W. Dean. Fennel and rue: a novel; il. by Charlotte Harding. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. 130 p. O. cl., †$1.50.

A young novelist receives a letter from an unknown woman asking that she be permitted to read the concluding chapters of his serial, as she is hopelessly ill and may not live until it is finished in the magazine. Verriar finds he has been hoaxed and resents it furiously. Later it chances that, ignorant of each other's identity, they meet at a winter house party, where the girl is engaged to provide entertainment for the guests. A curious chain of circumstances results, elaborated and analyzed by the author's characteristic method, with a wholly unforeseen climax.

After an absence of more than forty years Mr. Howells revisited the scenes of his early life in Italy, the result being this delightful volume. It describes all he saw in a thoroughly holiday spirit, comparing his impressions of long ago with the Rome of the present, which he found greatly improved; he touches upon street scenes, popular customs, certain picturesque features of the Papal church, the genius and manners of the people, and a hundred phases of interest. "Roman holidays" takes up the larger part of the book; in addition are chapters on: Up and down Madeira; Two up-town blocks into Spain; Ashore at Genoa; Naples and her joyful noise; Pompeii revisited; A week in Leghorn; Over at Pisa; Back at Genoa; Eden after the fall. Profusely illustrated from photographs.

The editor is professor in Romance languages in Princeton University. In this edition of "Les misérables" he has endeavored to reduce the novel to the limits of a text book. With this in view, all extraneous matter, such as the description of the battle of Waterloo, the long dissertations on convent establishments and on the riots of 1832, and the description of Parisian sewers, has necessarily been omitted. The early history of Fantine and a few episodes have also been omitted; brief summaries of these will be found in the notes.

The aim is to make a Bible application of speculative masonry and to create a desire for both the Bible and freemasonry. A clear understanding of the Bible is essential for a correct interpretation of speculative masonry.

Professor Hulbert is professor of American history, Marietta College, and author of "The Ohio River," etc. He tells all that is best worth recording of the history of the Niagara River—of its commercial present and its immense commercial future, and much besides of the story of the towns and cities on its banks or in its near vicinity. Not only do we read of the doings of red men and white men as connected with this stream, but also of its natural history—its fauna, its varied and abundant flora and its geology. An immense amount of carefully ordered information is here brought together into a most entertaining and informing book.

- Hume, Fergus W. The green mummy. N. Y., George W. Dillingham Co., [1908.] c. 5-324 p. front. D. cl., *$1.25.
Prof. Braddock sends Sidney Bolton over seas to purchase a Peruvian mummy with priceless emeralds in its hands. When reaching the professor's town with his treasure Bolton spends a night at an inn. In the morning the professor receives the case, but it contains the body of the murdered Bolton. Detective work follows; a Peruvian claim is made for the stolen mummy; the mummy is found but the jewels are gone—astonishing facts keep the reader on the alert. The professor's daughter adds her little romance to the tale.

Hume, Fergus W. The sacred herb. N. Y., G. W. Dillingham Co., [1908.] c. 302 p. front. D. cl., †$1.25.

Two murders, into which enter many mysterious details, are the central episodes. "The sacred herb," a product of the East, the smoke of which produces a trance, is traced by its odor in both tragedies. A young girl is being tried for the first murder when the story opens. A rich and idle young lord falls in love with her at sight and constitutes himself a detective in her behalf. He tracks the real murderers through a perfect network of incidents which throw suspicion first on one person then on another. The characters are picturesque and numerous. Occultism is made to play a part in solving the story's mystery.

Hume, Fergus W. The sealed message. N. Y., G. W. Dillingham Co., [1908.] c. '07. 291 p. front. D. cl., †$1.25.

A photograph record fished up by two young Englishmen out on a vacation is "the sealed message," which reveals the fact that a young girl is imprisoned in a neighboring house on the pretense that she has homicidal mania. One of the men goes in search of her and, of course, falls in love. His friend, who is a lawyer, helps him to free her and obtain her true story. A queer will and a large fortune have been the motives for her imprisonment by an old army officer. Murderous Sicilians, a twin sister of the imprisoned girl, women adventuresses, and other strange characters all help to entangle the story to the end.

A New England village is the background for the experiences of a bright young woman, her Aunt Susan, and the "hired girl" in making a home. From being summer boarders they become householders, and go through many delightful hours in fitting up an old-fashioned white house with furniture, books and pictures long in storage. The writer also relates the story of her work in her garden and orchard, describes the people around her, her best neighbors, etc.

Although this is a sympathetic biography of the "great nullifier," Mr. Hunt voices the views of the Southern unionists. He says: "I endeavor to show not only the chief events in the political career of John C. Calhoun, but his complete identification with two opposing popular movements—how he helped to form a broad national sentiment, the part he played in the struggle in his state against that sentiment, and his leadership of the triumphant sectional sentiment. I have shown that, as he was a popular leader, he was dominated by popular forces and that his power lay in his correct interpretation of the will of the people."

Hunt, Violet B. White rose of weary leaf N. Y., Brentano's, 1908. c. 437 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The title is taken from a poem of Swinburne's. When the heroine, Amy Steevens, first appears she had been for years a rolling stone. She had assisted in a dressmaker's shop and in a typewriting establishment; had been secretary to an author and companion to an idle lady abroad; had been on the stage, to Russia with conspirators and on a battlefield in South Africa and in the hospitals afterwards. She was efficient under every combination of circumstances. She becomes housekeeper for an English authoress with an abnormally clever daughter of twelve and a husband who proves Amy's fate. The heroine is thirty-three, the hero twenty-one. Fidelity King, however, is sufficiently young looking and brilliant to win the admiration of Neil Duncan, a struggling dramatist, who comes to New York to seek his fortune. She is rich, and one of a distinguished old family; he poor, and without ancestors. He has lived in Europe the greater part of his life, is well-bred, and possesses a sincere love for books and art in all its forms. They are in entire sympathy from the first day they meet, their story playing through a gay New York season. How their friendship changes to love is graphically told; their story ends in a most unexpected dénouement.

A tale of Viking days which depicts the beginnings of modern England. The hero is Wulnoth, the right singer, the tale telling the story of his adventures and his love. The decorative scheme is the same as that which distinguished "The thrall of Leif the lucky," the text being enclosed in a pale green frame, each chapter beginning with an initial enclosed in a similar frame. The frontispiece is in colors.

Innes, Norman. My lady's kiss: a romance. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., [1908.] c. 312 p. pls. cl., $1.50.

"My lady's kiss" is a romance of the time of the Thirty Years' War in Germany, in which fights, sieges, plots and counterplots follow each other with delightful rapidity. The story concerns a scheming guardian and a lovely ward, a gallant free-captain and an Italian beauty, whose machinations finally rebound, like a boomerang and clear the way for the deserving.

"Little Miss Cricket," it will be remembered, is the nickname of a little girl who was separated from her mother on account of an accident on a ferryboat and apparently lost. Her experiences before she is restored to her mother are related in "Little Miss Cricket" and "Little Miss Cricket's new home." Now, as Penelope Carey, a tenderly loved little maiden, she is entered by her mother at Prof. Ruhe's school, which he has called "Kinderlust." The children all have animal pets, which they look after. With the time given to them, and to her studies, Penelope is fully occupied, nevertheless manages to have other interesting and lovely happenings.

The Samaritans, an ancient religious sect now almost extinct, with special beliefs of its own, have always lived in the hope of the coming of a Messiah different from Christ, one raised up from among themselves who would be a prophet like Moses, from whom no vicarious sacrifice was looked for. His kingdom is to be of this earth and of some political significance. The Samaritans' High Priest lives at Nablous, at the foot of the sacred mountain Gerizim. This little pamphlet, translated by the professor of Arabic at Pacific University, is devoted to the subject.

There are about 3000 Japanese in the neighborhood of Greater New York. This is intended as a record and guide to this population. It gives a brief history of the organization of each Japanese institution, agency, store and individual work, and is printed in the Japanese as well as in the English language. It gives the constitution of the Nippon Club, a representative New York Japanese Club, and also a directory of 180 well-known Japanese residents of New York. Much information upon the Japanese by George Trumbull Ladd, Seth Low, and others, is also included.

A young English barrister, brilliant and unscrupulous, a youthful American millionaire, a baronet who was born to be a splendid follower rather than a resourceful leader, all fall in love with a charming girl of seventeen, who drops as by magic into the lives of the trio and becomes a full member of their company, which they call "The four philanthropists." What its object is and how it works is amusingly depicted. The story is of the present day, its scene is London and rural Great Britain.

Jepson, Edgar. Tangled wedlock. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. 3-343 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The author of "The Admirable Tinker" tells a story of modern bohemia in the artistic and literary world of New York among people devoted to fads—mental healing, hygienic vegetarianism, mesmerism, spiritualism, etc. The heroine is the daughter of a woman who has utterly neglected her while she worked for the higher culture and greater life of a "Circle" she had drawn about her. The hero is a sculptor, and he and the "unconventional" heroine talk on many topics and do many foolish things. They marry; then the sculptor hears from his first wife; he leaves the heroine, who marries his titled cousin. The first husband returns; the second husband dies; all ends well according to "bohemian" ideals and circumstances.

The first novel from the pen of Miss Johnston in the last four years. It is a romance of the days of Thomas Jefferson; the plot centers about the Napoleonic character of Lewis Rand, a leading Virginia lawyer, who becomes one of the great men of his party and time. He is a self-made man of the people, and when he confesses his love for Jacqueline Churchill, whose two aristocratic uncles are uncompromising Federalists, the result is quite dramatic. Jefferson and Aaron Burr appear in the story. There is a rich background of the suave old Virginia life.

The author not only knows Edison intimately, but in the preparation of his book received the co-operation of many of Edison's friends, who gave him some very human details of the inventor's early life. The story reads like a romance. After years of struggle for a bare existence he was at twenty two a full fledged inventor, having sold his stock-ticker for forty-thousand dollars. After this start the quadruplex telegraph, the dynamo, the incandescent light, the phonograph, the kinetoscope, and many things equally wonderful have followed. The inventor himself gave much of the personal history recorded.

After thirty years in India the author gives his interpretation of the problems that confront her to-day—and the difficulties the post has handed down. As the home of many faiths, a land swept by invasion after invasion, bound by an exorable cost system, the spirit of its belief at variance with all progress—still the author finds the modern stirring of unrest, the germ of growth. A work based on thirty years' residence, observation and experience in India, revealing remarkable insight into the problems and tendencies of the present day in that country. The volume is attractively illustrated from photographs collected by the author.

An account of a summer ramble through Ireland. The author entered the country a total stranger, interested in the island chiefly on account of what he had heard and read of its people, its old ruins, its stories and legends, and the reputed beauty of its landscapes. He travelled through sixteen of the thirty-two counties, visiting each of the four divisions of the island, North, East, South and West, and coming in contact with all classes and conditions of its citizens. He has added to the narrative of his experiences bits of Irish history gathered from reliable sources and some interesting legends.

To the sub-title, which expresses somewhat fully the main scope of this work, little need be added. The author's aim has been to present as clear and comprehensive a picture of the world's peoples, in the form in which they exist to-day, as could be unfolded within the limits of a moderate sized volume. As within these narrow limits room had further to be made for an exceptionally large number of illustrations, Dr. Keane found that his text needed the utmost condensation consistent with clearness and adequate treatment.

Author is professor of the science of society in Yale University. A scientific study of colonization, which aims to meet the needs of American college students, both by presenting in English a mass of data not readily accessible, and by arranging the same in such system and order as to emphasize salient aspects of the process of colonization. In scope the whole history of colonization is covered, excepting that of the English and French and of several of the most recent colonizing peoples; information concerning these is reasonably easy of access. The several chapters treat of the colonies of the Orientals and ancients, mediæval and modern Italians, Portuguese, Spanish, Dutch, Scandinavians and Germans. The view point is in general that of the economist and sociologist. Bibliography (13 p.). Index.

The first edition of "American insects" was published in 1904. In this new and revised edition a detailed analytical table of contents has been substituted for the simple list of chapter titles used in the first edition and an additional chapter on the subject of insect behavior and psychology has been added. While descriptive accounts of the reflexes and instincts of insects are to be found on almost every page of the book—insect instinct is indeed one of the primary subjects of the book—the author has believed that a special discussion and attempt at analysis of the springs and control of insect behavior would be of interest to the reader.

Author is professor of entomology in Stanford University. In this "rambling, talky, little book," as he calls it, the author has endeavored to put together a number of strange, true stories that are at once descriptive of the habits of certain insects and are besides of sufficient charm to interest young and old readers. "Mary" is his constant companion, who takes a lively interest in the insect life of the California fields and orchards.

Kelly, Myra, [Mrs. Allan McNaughton.] Rosnah; il. by Wallace Morgan. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. c. 398 p. O. cl., †$1.50.

By the author of "Little citizens," "Wards of liberty," etc. It is the story of a very attractive Irish girl in Ireland in 1880. It opens with the return to the ancestral mansion in Ireland of General Fitzgerald and his wife from India, where they have been for many years. They have four sons and a daughter of twenty years, all of whom have been brought up by different relatives in Ireland, having all been sent home at an early age to escape the deadly climate of India. They know little about each other or their parents. The daughter has been so happy with an aunt that she refuses to leave her, and half in fun, half wilfully allows her cousin, Lady Rosnah, to take her place. The situations that follow are both humorous and romantic.

The author says of his work that "it by no means pretends to be a deep, comprehensive, critical study of the peasant and the peasant question; that is reserved for a future work. It is indeed but the frame of the picture of the life-history of the teeming millions of those who form the real backbone of Russia." Dr. Kennard gained his knowledge of the peasant from personal contact and living with him in all parts of European Russia. He reveals appalling conditions of poverty and suffering. He is an English surgeon, and is now delivering a series of lectures in this country on Russia and her peasantry. The book is in three divisions: Village life; History; Russia's poison—bureaucracy and church.

Kennedy, C: Rann. The servant in the house; il. with portraits of the characters in the play. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. 152 p. D. cl., †$1.25.

A practical application of Christianity is shown in the play of "The servant in the house," now creating a growing interest as played at the Savoy, New York. The portraits are of its present actors. It is a story of modern life, illustrating the universal conflict in the contrast between the noble and the base in living characters, revealing with great clearness an underlying spiritual ideal. It tears the mask from hypocrisy to preach the doctrine of universal brotherhood.

Kennedy, C: Rann. The winterfeast; with il. from scenes from the play. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. 159 p. pls. O. cl., $1.25.

"The winterfeast" sets forth the devastating evil of a lie. The scene is Iceland, the hut of Thorkel, an old Viking, dimly lighted on this evening of the feast of Winter's Night, October 14, A.D. 1020. The lie, told twenty years before, has been well-nigh forgotten. Long ago Thorkel had repeated to a maiden a false message of scorn purporting to come from his foster-son—her lover, Bjorn. The word—"Un-asked!"—stung her pride almost to the death, and led her to marry Valbrand, Thorkel's own and favorite son. On this Winter's Night, after twenty years' absence in America, where it was thought he had perished, Bjorn, returning, learns from his brother's wife what she has believed of him, and then leaves without revealing the treachery of his father.

The first of the six volumes which are to make the Historical Bible, of which two are now ready. Author is Wesley professor of biblical literature in Yale University. His work is in the nature of a popular commentary purposing "to put into the hands of students the really vital parts of the Bible, arranged in chronological order and to interpret its essential teachings into the thought and language of to-day." The introductions to the first two volumes contain a careful summary of the results of modern investigation in all branches of Semitic science. Appendices to v. 1 give: The late priestly version of Creation A practical biblical reference library; and General questions and subjects for general research. The reference library and general questions for the period treated appear in each volume.

Mr. Kidd has been a careful student of the natives of South Africa, and has produced in his "Savage childhood," and other books, a study of Kafir characteristics which is of great value. In the present volume he attacks with intelligence and vigor the problem of the future of the black natives of South Africa in relation to civilization. He holds that this problem must be attacked in the light of the fact that the Kafir has an extraordinary spirit of altruism and a camaraderie rarely equalled among civilized nations, and that the whole bent of his mind and customs is towards socialism; the individualism of the white man is not possible to him.

Story deals with life in Indian Territory during the last years of the tribal rule of the Five Civilized Nations, before the admission of Oklahoma as a State. The time of the tale is the last decade of the last century. The heroine, daughter of a half-breed Indian and a white mother, falls in love with a young lawyer from the East, who marries her and deserts her. He meets his fate at the hands of her kinsman, who later lays the wrongs of the Indians before the President. The history of the tale is said to be accurate.

Kinross, Albert. Joan of Garioch; il. by J. M. Burke. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. c. 5+350 p. pls. D. cl., †$1.50.

An English war correspondent upon his return finds the girl he loves has been sold by her parents to a Russian to help them out of financial distress. For weeks he traces every clue and follows her to Russia, and after thrilling adventures gets his rival face to face with loaded pistols. The story gives a picture of Russia during the recent revolution.

Kirkup, T. A primer of Socialism. [N. Y., Macmillan,] 1908. 60 p. D. cl., *40 c. net.

The purpose of this little book is to give a clear and impartial account of socialism. It supplies in brief and simple form the information on the subject which the author has given in his article "Socialism," contributed to the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" (1887) in his "Enquiry into socialism" and in his "History of socialism." The book is mainly historical and expository, the reader being left to form his own conclusions or to pursue his inquiries as he may see fit.

Kitton, Frederic G. Charles Dickens: his life, writings and personality; with numerous illustrations. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. 15+504 p. O. cl., *$3.50 special net.

It is thirty years since Forster's life of Dickens appeared, during which so much fresh and interesting material has been discovered that a new "life" has come to be a crying need. That need is supplied by this book which at last gives us a full and adequate biography of perhaps the best loved author of the last century.

Purports to be the biography of a man whom the author knew first at the University of Virginia and later at Harvard College, and who finally disappeared from America. Besides the fact that he had lost the woman he loved and was about to marry, and his solitary indulgence in strong drink, the writer learned little about him. He calls him William Wirt Dunlevy. Many of his papers are included in the volume; they are mostly studies in mental strain.

Knapp, Adeline. The well in the desert. N. Y., Century Co., 1908. c. 3-329 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The desert is the Arizona desert. A man imprisoned for a murder through the treachery of a lawyer breaks jail a wreck, and implores the lawyer for means to reach home to die. The lawyer again betrays him. He breaks from his captors and roams for months through the desert, building up his health and becoming once more a man with hopes and ambitions. Then comes the return to civilization and the coming into the poor prisoner's life a deep, strong, enduring joy. The author has spent two or three years away from civilization in a cañon in the Contra Costa foothills, California.

This study of Louise de la Vallière occupied the leisure hours of six years in the author's life, and is based upon new letters and papers. It was first published in 1880, and has gone through four editions in France. Besides giving the life of the beautiful and fascinating Frenchwoman, maid of honor to the Duchesse d'Orleans, and mistress of Louis xiv. (who made her a duchess), the volume includes the leading scandals of this great monarch's reign. The writer succeeds in portraying this celebrated favorite in most attractive colors; her best traits are brought to the front, and neither is her sin or her repentance forgotten. Index.

The initial volume of the section of "The Shakespeare library" known as "Shakespeare's England," which will embrace a series of volumes illustrative of the life, thought and literature of England in the time of Shakespeare. This work, of which so much use was made in Scott's "Kenilworth," is, even apart from the interest of its main subject, of the greatest value on account of the list which it contains of the library of a certain Captain Cox, a worthy mason, who had "great oversight in matters of story"—a list which affords an excellent view of the popular literature of the day. All the works mentioned are fully described in Dr. Furnivall's introduction.

La Ramée, Louise de, ["Ouida," pseud.] Helianthus. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. c. 5+445 p. D. cl., $1.50.

This novel was begun at least ten years before "Ouida's" death (January 24, 1908). The manuscript had been put in type and was partially corrected when she died. It is a story of international relations and great political and diplomatic movements in modern Europe, the scene being laid chiefly in Helianthus, easily identified as Italy. The drama is enacted amid gorgeous surroundings. Among the dramatic personæ will easily be recognized many of the rulers of modern Europe: The Kaisers of Germany and Austria, the Czar and Czarina and others. A genuine and intense love of liberty pervades the story and a thorough knowledge of her day and generation.

Last (The) Egyptian: a romance of the Nile; il. by Francis P. Wightman. Phil., Edward Stern & Co., Inc., 1908. c. '07. 7-287 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Kara, the last of a long line of royal Egyptians, inherits at the death of his grandmother, Hatatcha, the secret of an ancient tomb, which contained, besides the mummies of Egyptian kings and their families, an ancient library, consisting of papyrus and hieroglyphic slabs, older than any ever discovered, and a treasure chamber filled with priceless gems. Years ago, while visiting London, Hatatcha was greatly wronged by a Lord Roane, so with the desire for revenge she made Kara promise, before confiding the secret to him, to show no mercy to any of Lord Roane's family. Complications arise when Lord Roane, his son, Lord Consinor, with his wife and daughter Aneth come to Egypt. Kara nearly forgets his promise when he falls in love with Aneth. Gerald Winston, a wealthy young archaeologist, is his rival. Many interesting situations ensue, which lead up to a happy ending.

"The scope of my 'History of the Spanish Inquisition' precluded a detailed investigation into the careers of individual tribunals. Such an investigation, however, is not without interest, especially with respect to the outlying ones, which were subjected to varying influences and reacted in varying ways on the peoples among whom they were established. Moreover, in some cases, this affords us an inside view of inquisitorial life, of the characters of those to whom were confided the awful irresponsible powers of the Holy Office and of the abuse of those powers by officials whom distance removed from the immediate supervision of the central authority, suggesting a capacity for evil even greater than that manifested in the Peninsula."—Author's Preface.

Lea, General Homer. The vermilion pencil: a romance of China. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. 6+331 p. front. D. cl., †$1.50.

The author holds a commission as Lieutenant-General in the Chinese Army of Reform, which has for its object the overthrowing of the present Dowager Empress and the reestablishing of the deposed Emperor, whom she has imprisoned. He draws upon his personal experiences in this tragic romance of Chinese life and character and Chinese politics. He describes "the lingchee," a special form of Chinese torture, quite graphically.

Lea, J: The romance of bird life: being an account of the education, courtship, sport and play, journeys, fishing, fighting, piracy, domestic and social habits, instinct, strange friendships and other interesting aspects of the life of birds; with 26 illustrations. Phil., Lippincott, 1909, [1908.] 376 p. D. (Romance ser.) cl., *$1.50 net.

Avoiding all dry and purely scientific information, this book, a new volume in the "Romance series," makes attractive reading, and yet conveys much accurate information. It deals with all kinds of birds in all parts of the world, and gives interesting descriptions of the strange and curious in the bird world.

The life of the Princess Marie Thérèse-Charlotte, daughter of Louis xvi., beginning with the time of her imprisonment in the Temple. The account is drawn from letters and documents of the period, and the personal diary of the princess. After days of suspense and terror, during which her brother, the Dauphin, died, she was removed to Hünningen, and thence to Austria, where she lived in exile for three and a half years. Then, for some reason, she was permitted to go to her uncle, Louis xviii., and was wedded to her cousin, Duc d'Angoulême, but the dark tragedies from which she had so miraculously escaped "were doomed to weigh upon her like the memory of a ghastly dream all the days of her life."

It is a

free discussion of the present day status of English grammar and of the relations of this science to other forms of language study.

A gang of clever, gentlemanly appearing thieves are the characters in a series of ingeniously conceived adventures, which have their scenes in various parts of Europe. The head of the gang masquerades as a German prince of unlimited wealth. It is he who plans the robberies and directs their carrying out. He travels in a handsome automobile, puts up at the finest hotels, and as he is handsome and accomplished soon succeeds in winning the regard of a lady who shows fine jewels and thus opens the way for his associates to rob her. Sometimes he finds himself in rather desperate situations, but the story leaves him in retirement, rich and happy.

A handsome house in Park Lane, London, is the scene of many remarkable episodes. A Hebrew financier, with offices in Old Broad St., occupies the whole house. It is a house of mystery, entirely unfurnished, excepting the reception room. The true history of the house and its occupant is gradually unfolded, showing that the financier had a bitter wrong to avenge and that he only waited his opportunity. There are two love stories, the two couples becoming more or less involved in the "pauper's" schemes.

A French reporter is the central figure in a mysterious murder case. He successfully plays the amateur detective, solving with extraordinary cleverness the puzzling details of the seeming murder of a young French woman, who is found locked in her room in a dying condition, having been shot and brutally beaten. She lives in summer in an isolated pavilion next to the laboratory of her father, a celebrated scientist, whose work she takes part in. As she was carefully locked in her room at night the question is how did the murderer reach her and how did he escape, as the doors and windows all appear intact.

Author is chief superintending gas examiner to the Corporation of the City of London, and professor of chemistry at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, England. His book treats the subject, which has assumed more and more importance during the last decade, from a popular but comprehensive point of view. A chapter is devoted to the fuel problem and "the probable lines on which a world, bankrupt in fuel, will find the means of regenerating the energy which is essential to life and prosperity." There is a discussion on the value of alcohol and a plea for increase of experimental work in its use as a fuel. Bibliography (3 p.).

Lewisohn, Ludwig. The broken snare. N. Y., B. W. Dodge & Co., 1908. c. 289 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A psychological study of the marriage relation by a new writer. The novel has its chief setting in a cheap flat on Morningside Heights. Dr. Garnett, his wife and daughter Frances live here a struggling existence on $1200 a year. Frances is a pretty, well-educated girl, whose dull life is slowly breaking her heart. Her father introduces into his home Julian Ware, a cultured man, who does not believe in the tyranny of marriage. The young people love each other and Ware several times tries to break away from the fascination of Frances. Finally he tells her plainly his theories of love and marriage and she rather than give him up leaves her home and goes with him South, where she is introduced as "Mrs. Ware." In the end after painful experiences they realize their mistake and marry.

Lillibridge, W: Otis. The dissolving circle. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 314 p. col. front. D. cl., $1.50.

The men and women forming the colony that meet at Sioux Falls, S. D., for the purpose of securing divorces represent "the dissolving circle." They have no permanent residence here, in a short time their stories are told and they pass on to other scenes. How they kill time while waiting, the new interest that often arise in their lives and lead to dramatic endings are strongly depicted by the author of "Where the trail divides." The strong primitive western man plays a part in righting some of the wrongs of the story in his own simple, honest way. As a foil and a contrast, one of a class the author calls "effete easterners" is pitted against him.

Lillibridge, W: Otis. The quest eternal; frontispiece in color by the Kinneys. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 16+326 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The hatred of Dr. Macleod for his one time partner Stone, who has allowed him to be innocently imprisoned, forms the background of fate that the hero must struggle against in his quest for love and fortune. Returning from the penitentiary Macleod finds Stone successful. Broken he leaves to begin life on a western farm, vowing if Stone attempts to marry he will seek his life. On the farm his son Robert is born with a club foot. Poor and indifferent he does not attempt an operation, and when they do consent the doctor finds Stone is the only safe man to operate. Years of saving and the day for Robert to go to the city comes. That day the money and his father disappear—next to be heard of as a suicide and murderer of Stone, whose marriage he had heard of. The girl Robert loves goes East to become a famous opera singer and he takes up the struggle as cripple and finally as consumptive, but all his trials bring about a happy ending.

The gems of thought and expression, the quaint conceits and homely similes, as far as they appear in Lincoln's authenticated writings and speeches, have been gathered into this Anthology. The quotations are arranged roughly by their subject. At the end of each the date and occasion upon which it was delivered is given, and also a reference to the volume and page of Lincoln's Complete Works, where it may be found.

Lincoln [Abraham] centennial medal; presenting the medal of Abraham Lincoln by Jules Edouard Roiné, together with papers on the medal; its origin and symbolism by G. N. By an ingenious mechanical device the medal prepared by Jules Edouard Roiné for the Lincoln Centennial, February 12, 1909, is bound in this volume, and George N. Olcott, of Columbia University, has furnished a scholarly essay on the origin and symbolism of medals. Roiné ranks as one of the greatest medallists of the world. The copies of the medal have been struck under the instructions of Mr. Robert Hewitt, the well-known collector of medallic Lincolniana, who is the owner of the copyright. On the 12th of February, 1909, the dies of the medal are to be cancelled, and then deposited in the collection of the American Numismatic Society. After that date no more copies of the medal or of the book containing the medal can be produced. The contents of the book also include: The Lincoln Centenary, 1809-1909, by R. Lloyd Jones; Farewell address at Springfield, Ill., February 11, 1861; Emancipation proclamation, September 22, 1862; Letter to Horace Greeley on the policy of the administration, August 22, 1862; Letter to General J. By the author of "Cap'n Eri" and "Mr. Pratt," etc. The same quaint humor that characterized the author's former books will be found in this. Cy Whittaker, who, as a boy, had run away to sea, returns to his native Cape Cod village to find his old homestead sadly changed by "improvements." Force of circumstances lead the old bachelor to adopt a little girl and to undertake her education, assisted by two old cronies. The amusing difficulties with the child's education make an entertaining foil to the efforts of the little girl's worthless father to regain possession of her.

The story has its scene in the Balkans. Its moving cause is a Bulgarian conspiracy, behind which is Russia, the aim being to assassinate the king and to take over by Russia not only Bulgaria but adjacent states. The conspirators know each other through "the stem of the crimson dahlia," which carries certain messages. The curiosity of a young American tourist in Constantinople involves him in the conspiracy, and before he can free himself from the toils he goes through many thrilling experiences. A young American girl and her father, ignorant of the real meaning of the conspiracy, have lent it their aid. The three Americans are thrown together in the fight for their own freedom.

First given to the public as a Drew Lecture at Hackney College, October 27, 1907. This college was founded in 1803 for the education of ministers of the Congregational churches, and is now a constituent part of London University. The author as a physicist is recognized as an authority by the materialistic school and his services as active member of the English Society for Psychical Research entitle him to equal honor as a psychologist. The author "we believe has never found anything in scientific research that he considered inconsistent with Christian dogma." The present argument is on scientific grounds. He claims science will reach further and further into the unknown and may "receive a clasp from the hand of Christ himself."

The book tells of conditions in the capital and labor world during the years 1912 to 1932, when blood was shed and all kinds of secret societies were working at cross purposes to bring about true socialism. The story purports to be written in the year 419 of the Brotherhood of Man, seven centuries after the events occurred. An old manuscript hidden in 1932 by the wife of the man who lost his life for the cause contains the many arguments for socialism and a lurid picture of the last days of the reign of capital.

The London Municipal Society is an association devoted to combating the theories and actions of Socialism, and offers this book as an arsenal of arguments against that political thesis. The matter is presented in such form that it is easy to get at the facts and arguments on any given point, and a very full index makes it possible for the anti-socialist to oppose from this volume almost any argument that may be brought against his position.

Long, J. Luther. Felice; with frontispiece by Ja. Montgomery Flagg. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. c. 6+156 p. D. cl., $1.

A quick tempered but kind-hearted barber is the means of having a man arrested and sent to prison for stealing two loaves of bread. When he discovers that the theft was made to feed his starving family of little folk, who had just lost their mother, he is in despair. The story that follows is as amusing as it is pathetic. The barber adopts the family of little ones, and sets in motion the machinery of the law, to set the father free. The characters are chiefly Italians of "Little Italy" of a big city, their English and exciting ways being extremely laughable.

The author of "The wild flower book for young people," and other nature books tells the story of a young girl and her brother Joseph, who utilize a triangular strip of ground for planting a flower garden. The girl loves her roses best, and the boy finds delight in working the soil and in tending his hardy plants. Together they sow seeds and watch for them to sprout; they set out young plants and wait in patience until their flowers unfold; they wage war with weeds and insect pests, and, at length, prepare to meet the winter. They learn the habits of birds and other interesting things. Illustrated from photographs.

Professor Lowell presents new evidence regarding life in Mars gleaned from the very favorable observations made at the Lowell Observatory last year. The book is not merely an argument in favor of Professor Lowell's theory, but also outlines a new science which the author calls the science of planetary history—the history of the career of a planet considered as such. Professor Lowell has pointed out that this subject bridges the evolutionary gap between the nebular hypothesis and the Darwinian theory, since it deals with the genesis and development of what we call a world. The volume is written for the general reader, the mathematical and other demonstrations of the various steps of the argument having been placed in an appendix, and the illustrations are numerous.

Kate Schuyler on the eve of being married to a man her parents have approved of in every way elopes with a former admirer. The Schuylers are well-to-do people of the early days of the past century. They bitterly resent the humiliation of their daughter's wild act. Marcia is Kate's younger sister, who has always admired her prospective brother-in-law, while he has felt for her a warm brotherly affection. That the wedding may take place influence is brought to bear to have her replace Kate, and she becomes a wife, scarcely realizing her responsibilities. Her life with her husband is the story. He learns to love her deeply and trust her utterly.

The author divides his book into two parts. The first half presents Christianity as a world religion. The second part deals with the right of this world-religion so endowed to enter the lists with the ethnic faiths which it is destined to supplant. This it does, not as a competitive religion, but because the author believes it is unquestionably the best.

Dr. Mabie herewith furnishes an answer to the question forming the title. Not long since one of his friends propounded the question to a theologian of repute. The answer returned was so hesitant and confused as to surprise and disappoint the querist. The author has given much thought to the subject of the atonement, which he sets forth in a number of fitted chapters to solve difficulties which have perplexed many minds.

Seraphica, a wilful little French Duchess, and the obstinate Prince Renaud, of neighboring duchies, were designed to marry each other. It was in the time when King Louis XV. of France was but a boy, with a regent on the throne in the person of Philip, Duke of Orleans. Renaud refused because he was in love with a court favorite and besides had never seen the little duchess, and he ran away to Paris, where Seraphica followed to punish him. Dressed like a man and fighting like one, she drew Renaud out of one difficulty after another. How he learned who she was and at last gave her his heart is all in the story. An account of the late war between Russia and Japan. Mr. McCormick was the Associated Press representative with the Russian army, and went right through the war from beginning to end. He heard the opening shot at Port Arthur, and was on the firing line at the great battles of Mukden and Liaoyang. Not only did he see more of the war than any other American correspondent, but he saw more than any other non-combatant. The book is a dispassionate survey of the war, its causes, and its lessons. It is illustrated with reproduction of sketches made by Mr. McCormick, many of them on the field of battle, photographs of troops in action, maps, etc., etc.

decorations by Theodore B. Hapgood. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 127 p. D. cl., *$1.25.

A young New Yorker meets an old college chum in Paris, who by many ingenious arguments persuades him to assume his identity for a few weeks and travel with his wife and baby and nurse through the Tyrol. The friend who asks this remarkable favor is an Englishman, who for important political reasons, wishes to return to London and keep his return a secret. His friend assumes his name, his clothes and his monocle, little thinking of the many embarrassments that are in store for him and his supposed wife. As he falls deeply in love with the wife's sister he is looked upon as a faithless husband, much scandal resulting. Impossible as the conditions seem to be, once accepted, one cannot but be amused with the cleverness of the story. By the author of "Graustark."

McCutcheon, G: Barr. The man from Brod-ney's; with il. by Harrison Fisher. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 355 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

By the remarkable wills of their long-forgotten grandfathers, Robert Browne, an American, and Lady Deppingham, an Englishwoman, are to inherit an immense fortune and most of the island of Japaton condition that they marry within a year after the death of Taswell Skaggs, Browne's grandfather, who survives his partner, Lady Deppingham's grandfather. At it happens, however, both the heirs are married already, but they remove to Japaton with their households and lawyers and endeavor to find some way out of the difficulty. The "Man from Brod-ney's" is the lawyer for the natives of the island, who are to inherit the fortune if the conditions of the will are not fulfilled. His love affair with the Princess of Thorberg, who comes to the island, is the romance of the book.

Author holds that Western readers who wish to arrive at a correct understanding of Indian spiritual systems should approach them through a preliminary study of old Indian poetry as we have it preserved for us in the Ramayana and in the Mahabharata. About 38 years ago Mrs. Macdonald first published these stories to show the relation between the sentiment of Eastern and Western minds devoted to highest ideals. In the years that have passed, Edwin Arnold, Max Müller, Rhys Davids, A. P. Sinnett, and others have made oriental thoughts familiar in the West, but as yet these stories combine their most vital characteristics. Mrs. Macdonald found her Indian lore in the fine translation into French of Hippolyte Fauché.

This "ocean tramp" has "done his business in great waters" as an engineer in the merchant service. A man of wide reading and culture, his profession has made him familiar with some of the most romantic, pathetic, and fascinating phases of life in many different parts of the earth. Being endowed with keen and active powers of observation and reflection, combined with ability to describe his impressions in virile English, the author of these "Letters from an ocean tramp" has added to the literature of the sea a gem of philosophic prose.

All the thrilling incidents in this novel of deep mystery occur in New York City at an hour when darkness covers all. The very first night the hero, a young adventurer, arrives in New York he is plunged into an almost fathomless mystery, which involves a beautiful girl whose charming manner and great courage arouse wonder and admiration in the adventurer. Thrust into another man's shoes, and compelled to act without knowing why, the hero vainly tries to penetrate the darkness that surrounds him. His native resource enables him to skillfully answer questions without exposing himself and leads him safely on from adventure to adventure. Finally, a light appears on the horizon which gradually brightens until—the end.

The first prose drama by the author of "Sappho and Phaon." It is described as an imaginative study of New England temperament, as a local phase of broader human psychology. The scene is laid in a town of Massachusetts during the early witchcraft days of the seventeenth century. Suggested by Hawthorne's moralized legend of "Feathertop" in "Mosses from an old manse."

McKean, T. The master influence: a novel; with il. in col. by Will Grefé. Phil., Lippincott, 1908. c. 308 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

This is the author's second novel, his first, "The vortex," having been published about three years ago. It deals with social conditions of the present day. Its characters are modern people with modern ideas, and the scenes are laid mostly in New York, changing towards about the end to Sicily. The plot centres about the heroine, who believes herself incapable of love, although it later proves "the master influence" of her life. Governor Hughes is said to be the real hero of the story, the author acknowledging that his story has been suggested by the Governor of New York.

These two volumes comprise a historical document of the first importance—Madison's complete record of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, and give in the notes comparative comments based upon that journal and the less complete chronicles of the convention made by Yates, King and Pierce. His (Madison's) is the only continuous record of the proceedings of the convention. He took a seat immediately in front of the presiding officer, facing the members, and took down every speech or motion as it was made, using abbreviations of his own and immediately afterward transcribing his notes when he returned to his lodgings.

This new edition of the mystic drama is of interest after New Yorkers heard Mary Gordon sing in Detussy's opera dealing with the same theme last year. The beautiful Prima Donna herself posed for many of the illustrations in what is preeminently a holiday edition, with its graceful border designs and heavy paper. There is an explanatory introduction of both opera and play by Montrose Moses.

Magazine (The) subject-index. v. 1, A subject-index to seventy-nine American and English periodicals; forty-four indexed from their first issues to December 31, 1907; thirty-five indexed for the year 1907; comp. by F. Winthrop Faxon. Bost., Boston Book Co., 1908. 276 p. O. cl., *$3 net; hf. mor., *$4 net.

The chief value of this index as a bibliographical tool lies in the fact that in it the material in 79 American and English periodicals not covered by other indexes is made available to the investigator. This work was at first designed to be simply a cumulation in one alphabet of the four quarterly instalments in the Bulletin of Bibliography for 1907. Its scope was broadened, however, so that it forms a basic volume to be continued quarterly in the Bulletin of Bibliography, with an annual supplement in one volume.

The modern city of Palestina, Italy, is built on the site of the ancient Praeneste, which commanded a proud position among the towns of Latium. A learned treatise on the natural and political causes of the impregnable position of this city is given, with alphabetical and chronological list of its municipal officers. This is the first of a series of studies in which the author hopes to make some contributions to the history of the towns of the early Latin League from the topographical and epigraphical points of view.

The author, the late Downing Professor of the laws of England in the University of Cambridge, delivered these lectures in 1888, not intending to publish them, unless at some time he had leisure to work them up into a shape worthy of publication. However, it is now considered advisable to print them, since they contain several new and original ideas, provide a valuable introduction to the study of English constitutional history, and cannot detract from Maitland's reputation, since they show him as a brilliant populariser of knowledge. The work consists of a sketch of public law at five periods, I, 1307, II, 1509, III, 1625, IV, 1702, V, the present day.

The heroine is a charming young girl who, it is only discovered later in the story, is the possessor of a double personality. For a long space of time she seems as innocent as a child, then suddenly she develops traits of an apparently unscrupulous worldly woman. A young clergyman tries to persuade himself that he is interested in her soul's health alone, an eminent scientist observes her in the light of a puzzling psychological problem, and finally a brilliant diplomat, old enough to be her father, falls seriously in love with her.

An Englishman, named Guy Pershore, is sent to Vienna on a difficult political mission. On arriving he is warned that his life is in danger, but he refuses to leave. Returning to his rooms one evening he finds the body of a man with a dagger through his heart. He recognizes the man as his cousin, his likeness to himself being bewildering; he is a spy and a cutthroat and an altogether worthless fellow. The revolutionists, who immediately appear, believe the dead man to be Pershore himself and take Pershore for his cousin and the murderer. The complications which ensue seem endless. Two women are in the story, one of whom Pershore loves. By the author of "By right of sword."

An interesting character study of a young Englishman, who is first met in Cornwall, with a tutor, preparing to go to Oxford. He is only nineteen, the one desire of his life being to become a priest of the Anglican church. He meets an attractive woman who is seven years his senior, who strongly influences his career. Though she disappeared from his life suddenly, and they do not meet again for many years, when he has given up the thought of the priesthood, fate seems to settle that they belong to each other. The unexpected ending is not conventional, the attitude of the author throughout being rather in favor of free love.

A charming old English village, with its many beautiful homes and their delightful inmates, is the scene of a typical English society novel. The characters are attractive, refined people, but quite human in their love of gossip. There are two old bachelors, a lonely young girl, a dashing young widow, the vicar and his wife, Lady Wrotham, the chief personage socially who lives in the Abbey, and Mrs. Redcliffe of Exton Manor, a good, kind-hearted woman, who, it is discovered, had married her deceased sister's husband in Australia. Though the marriage is valid in law, the vicar's wife shows a very unchristian spirit when it is made public.

Now, for the first time, the author of "Tullie, a Mennonite maid" has departed from the field of her earlier work as a delineator of the Pennsylvania Dutch to write a love-story of people of Pennsylvania, but not of any sect or religion. There is a winsome little heroine, who is ruled with a rod of iron by her brilliant father, whose tragic story is a mystery for many chapters. Anne's "revolt" ends beautifully for her and a man most worthy of her love.

This essay is a brief effort to show that the agencies which are used in distributing the products of industry are responsible for the extremes in the social scale arranged on the basis of possessions have never been adopted by any rational action, but have come to be through fortuitous circumstances and have no moral basis. The sources of wealth are outlined to show who deserve the values that flow from these sources. Public ownership is named as the source of permanent improvement.

He was a surveyor, an astronomer, a mathematician, and when the nature of his public work so required he was a soldier and a diplomatist as well. He was employed throughout his whole life by both the Federal government and the individual states to settle vexed and difficult questions of boundaries and state lines, to lay out towns and cities, and to survey new roads through the wilderness.

An unflattered picture of fashionable New York. Among the characters are a man who marries a woman for her money and a woman who tries to marry a man for his millions, but fails in the end. There is a strange strain of Oriental mysticism in the story along with a love romance. The central situation is what appears to be a theft, the exact nature of which act, however, does not transpire nor the identity of the perpetrator until the close of the book. To complicate the mystery the author introduces for the first time that it has been used in fiction, the Chinese art of See-foo-tee, or double hypnotism.

The professor of dramatic literature in Columbia University selects twenty-three specimen short stories to show the development of form from the chief modern literatures. Each is prefixed by notes which discuss succinctly the literary position of the authors; notes are appended to the specimens calling attention to the merits and the defects of that particular story, considered as an example of form. The introduction traces the growth of the form through the history of literature and sets forth its slow attainment of the essential type. An appendix gives further views of the editor on the short-story.

An idealistic young artist named Keith, who has come to New York to paint a portrait, falls in love with Betty Lynch, the daughter of a well-known multimillionaire, but refuses to marry her except on condition that she takes no portion of her father's "tainted millions." Betty, though at first indignant at Keith's attitude, finally agrees to marry him and to live with him in England on his income. For a time all goes well, till money is needed for their sick child, when a definite rupture takes place between them, Betty going back to New York. She is not happy, however, thinks out an ingenious plan for winning back her husband and returns to England.

Mr. Selah Merrill, for sixteen years American Consul at Jerusalem, has put into this work the result of thirty-five years' continuous study and exploration of the remains of the ancient city. The work contains over 100 charts, maps, and photographs, many of which throw light on subjects which have hitherto been veiled in obscurity. Taking the year 70 A.D., the year of the Siege of Titus, as a starting point, and Josephus as a guide, the author has searched the ruins and excavated the grounds, and thus brings to the reader all that may be definitely known about the arrangement of the ancient city.

Author is sub-director of the Pasteur Institute, Paris. He follows the same trend of thought of his "Nature of man," that human misery and suffering are due to disturbances in our organic equilibrium, which strike discords into our mortal frame and rack our souls and bodies. He treats here specially of disease, old age, and death. Disease can be conquered, old age made happy, and natural death, now seldom occurring, may be brought about by correct living and a happy outlook in life.

The special feature of the "International geography" is that the description of each country is not only prepared according to a uniform plan embodying the principles of geography, but it is the work of a high authority, and in most cases of a native or long resident in the country described. Next to a thorough knowledge of the British Isles and the outlying parts of the British Empire, from the standpoint of a British subject, a sound knowledge of other countries, as they are known to their own people from within, is of the highest importance in teaching ourselves our true position among the countries of the world.

Under this figurative title the author presents facts about the care and building of the body in a way that will interest and impress children, and help them in forming daily habits likely to ensure future health and usefulness. The author believes that the reading and discussion of these facts in the sixth or seventh year in school will have most beneficial results. Technical terms and complicated physiological processes are avoided, and all the information is made to bear some practical application, or explain the reason for ordinary hygienic customs.

Opens in the year 70 A.D., culminating in the siege and downfall of Jerusalem, "the City of Delight." The greater part of the story has its setting in Jerusalem, in the home of Amaryllis, a beautiful Greek, where the majority of the characters finally congregate. The heroine is Laodice, who journeys to Jerusalem to meet her husband, Philadelphus Macabæus, to whom she had been married when four years old. Her father dies on the way of the pestilence and she is robbed of her dowry and letters. In Jerusalem friendless and alone, her husband having mysteriously disappeared, she is for a time the centre of a cruel intrigue. She, with other Jews, learns the story of Christ and obtains comfort in the knowledge. By the author of "The yoke."

Friday evenings in Harry Miner's Bowery Theatre, N. Y. City, were given over to amateur performances. One Friday night in October, 1903, a very bad amateur became a bore with his "near tenor" voice.

Tom Miner deftly hooked him off the stage unseen by most of the audience. Later in the evening a gallery boy, again bored, shouted "Get the hook." The expression has been translated in several languages and is used now in all kinds of business transactions to signify that one of the parties has "had enough."

A study whether socialism as an economic system is not resting on a materialistic conception of society and of the world at large as its philosophical basis and whether as a social movement it aims at freedom from capitalistic domination only and not also at freedom from the laws imposed by moral and religious laws. The attitude of contemporary socialists is studied and the economic side as to capital, surplus value, class struggle, wage system, does not enter into the present work except in its moral bearings.

The author is an authority on the history of the Victorian era, not only in Great Britain itself, but in its relation to all Europe. This is his last work; he died in March, 1908. The present generation of American readers knows but little of that period of England's history from the death of William IV. to the time Victoria was made a widow by the death of the Prince Consort. These years were full of interest and of potent events, but the author not only deals with the political conditions but also with the court life of the reign; with the personal characteristics and daily occupations of the Queen herself and her family relationships and intimate friends.

An old bachelor farmer and his spinster sister, a rather cross, narrow-minded person, conclude to adopt a boy from an orphan asylum. By a queer chance the message is misunderstood and a girl is sent them. After some deliberation they conclude to keep her and she becomes "Anne of Green Gables." She is a voluble, intelligent, sympathetic little thing, keenly appreciative of the kindness and love that cannot be withheld from her. Both brother and sister adopt her in every sense of the word, and the reader leaves her on the brink of a love affair, well dressed, well educated, and lovely in spite of red hair and freckles. Her quaint remarks on every subject are the attractive feature of the book.

"East Lynne" was one of the plays that Clara Morris, the well-known actress and novelist, made a reputation in. Her present story, "The new East Lynne," follows broadly the plot of the former novel. It is the story of a beautiful and good woman who marries a physician. In his home she finds a young ward. The doctor speaks of her as a child, but the wife quickly discovers that Olive Marr is passionately in love with her husband. In course of time she steals the wife's love. A man without a conscience who loves Mrs. Keith drugs her and abducts her. She is reported dead and the lovers marry. Five years later the real Mrs. Keith comes to her old home as governess to her two children, so disfigured however that she believes no one knows her. How the situation ends is left to the reader.

In this study by the dramatic editor of the Readers' Magazine the groundwork has been based upon Mr. William Archer's definitive English edition of Ibsen's dramas. Mr. Moses deals lucidly and comprehensively with the man and his environment and shows how he has dominated the stage of intellectual interest as poet, playwright, jurist, politician and philosopher with his strange, impressive personality. Each of the dramas is treated biographically, critically and with full details of its stage history; and a complete bibliography is appended (5 p.). Ibsen's viewpoint as regards women is brought out in the chapter entitled Ibsen the feminist.

Murfrees, Mary Noailles, ["Charles Egbert Craddock," pseud.] The fair Mississippian: a novel. Bost., Houghton Mifflin Co., 1908. c. 429 p. front. O. cl., †$1.50.

The great house on a lonely cotton plantation on the Mississippi River is the scene of a romantic story. The loneliness of the house is enhanced by nocturnal noises and night walkers, natural and supernatural, and the exciting adventures which occur on every page are surrounded by an atmosphere of mystery. The heroine is a southern woman and a widow of great charm; she lives in the old house with her three boys and aged uncle. The hero is a highly educated young man, who is the boys' tutor. The two love each other at sight, and surmount many difficulties to wed.

Murphy, T: Dowler. British highways and byways from a motor car: being a record of a five thousand mile tour in England, Wales and Scotland; with 16 il. in colour and 32 duogravures from photographs; also two descriptive maps. New Schaff-Herzog encyclopedia of religious knowledge; embracing biblical, historical, doctrinal and practical theology, and biblical, theological and ecclesiastical biography, from the earliest times to the present day; based on the 3d ed. of the Realencyklopädie [für protestantische theologie und kirche] by Johann Jakob Herzog; ed. by Albert Hauck and now in course of publication; prepared by more than 600 scholars and specialists under the supervision of S: Macauley Jackson, D.D., editor-in-chief, C: Colebrook Sherman and G: W: Gilmore. Complete in 12 v. v. 1, Aachen-Basilians. N. Y., Funk & Wagnall's Co., 1908. c. 500 p. O. cl., $5.

This is a reconstruction of the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of religious knowledge published in 3 v. in 1882-1884 and revised and published with new material added in 4 v. in 1886. It follows the same general plan as in the old work. Its points of dissimilarity are: 1, It contains much matter furnished directly by those contributors to the German work who have consented to condense their articles to the prescribed limit; 2, It contains hundreds of sketches of living persons derived in almost every instance from matter furnished by themselves; 3, The matter in proof has been sent to persons specially chosen for eminence in their respective departments; 4, A much more thorough bibliography is furnished and references are furnished in English for those who read only that language; 5, All articles based on German originals have been sent in proof to the writers when still living and many have made valuable corrections in the condensations. Charles Colebrook Sherman, the managing editor, is editor in biblical criticism and theology on "The new international encyclopedia," (Dodd, M. & Co.); Prof. George William Gilmore, who has prepared the bibliography, the great novelty of the encyclopedia, was formerly professor of biblical history and lecturer on religion in Bangor Theological Seminary.

The humorous account of life in a country town as experienced by the family of a minister of simple-hearted honesty, which quality is fully taken advantage of by his townspeople. One of the supposed family writes the story, and is really a prominent clergyman who withholds his name. The deep underlying purpose of the author is by ridicule to teach mean human nature a lesson and shame it into better fashions.

- Nicholas, Francis Child. The power supreme: a novel of church and state in South America; il. by W: Kirkpatrick. Bost., R. E. Lee Co., 1908. c. 8+347 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The story is in the form of an autobiography. It begins with the childhood of the hero, who is the natural son of a Spanish rubber merchant. The power exercised by the Spanish government, through the church in past days, and the cruel and dishonest treatment received by the natives who gather the rubber is realistically portrayed. The period is a revolutionary one, the politics of the time being intelligently described. The author travelled and explored largely in South Africa, living and travelling with the natives, from whom he gathered many of the facts. He has written "Around the Caribbean and across Panama" and other works.

This and the volume that follows will give to lovers of Montaigne a fresh and strong impression of the influence exerted by that great writer. In three parts it gathers together serious judgments passed by his contemporaries and later generations on Montaigne's character and work; casual allusions to him as known through his "Essais"; and evidences that many admirable authors have enriched themselves from his wit and wisdom. The second volume is a continuation of the work done in "The influence of Montaigne," but deals with vaguer illustrations of that influence as it may be traced in French and English literature. Passages from Bacon, Locke, Rousseau, and many others are put side by side with quotations from Montaigne, with most interesting results.

The Bishop of Limerick wrote this essay for a London Catholic review in which, owing to a difference of opinion between the editor and the writer, it is not to be published. The bishop here tries to set Cardinal Newman's views and opinions on questions involved in the errors of the Modernists side by side with the teaching of the present Pope in his last Encyclical. The essay is a protest against the theories of the Modernists, the Catholic party that is trying to harmonize the teaching of the church with the progress of modern science. Newman is shown to have borne witness against the heresy of the future.

Lionel Barrison, a young archaeologist, is persuaded by a mysterious Italian named Canuto to purchase what he is led to believe is a beautiful wax statue. He finds, however, that he has really acquired a lovely live young lady, carefully packed in ice and with a silver trumpet in her hand. He succeeds in resuscitating his property, and from here begins a most remarkable series of adventures. The girl can talk, but has entirely lost her memory and even forgotten her name. Of course Barrison falls in love with her, and fearing the Italian will return for her attempts to escape with her to London. The many thrilling things that happen to all the characters before the girl's story is fully told are beyond our space. By the author of "Susan."

It was late at night when Herbert Wrayson, a young English editor, unlocked and proceeded to open the door to his bachelor apartments located on the outskirts of London. On entering he was amazed to discover an elegantly dressed, refined girl. Mysterious things follow which culminate in the discovery of a murdered man. Peculiar circumstances cause Wrayson to suspect the girl of being the murderer, but he shields her. Gradually it becomes evident that the murder was not an ordinary one but the result of an issue in which a king and queen were concerned. At last the person who murdered Morris Barnes, and also another man, is revealed, and it proves to be—the avenger.

frontispiece by J: Rae. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 344 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A tale of intrigue, danger and romance dealing with the French Revolution was published under the title of "The Scarlet Pimpernel." (See American catalogue, 1905-07, pt. 2, 1905.) The daring and mysterious young English hero of the former story is now the "Elusive Pimpernel." The story opens in 1793 when Robespierre had proclaimed the reign of the Goddess of Reason. Most of the characters of the first book appear. The terrible and fascinating French agent Chauvelin goes to England to take his revenge of the "Scarlet Pimpernel," but finds him indeed the "Elusive Pimpernel" still adored by his French wife Marguerite.

The author of "The scarlet pimpernel" tells the story of the efforts of English statesmen to marry Queen Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., a bigoted, homely woman, either to the Duke of Wessex or to Philip II., King of Spain. The real heroine is a romantic, beautiful girl, lady-in-waiting to the Queen, who has been, when almost a child, betrothed to the Duke. She has a double, a gypsy fortune teller, who adds to the story's entanglement and defers its happy ending.

The rather far-fetched title covers a very clear exposition of the financial condition of the United States and the causes which have brought it about. The author is attorney at law in New York City. He traces the chief trouble to the fact that the people as a rule so alert to their own interests and so capable of comprehending the most intricate laws of commerce, have allowed financiers and bankers to manage the money of the United States unchecked by supervision and examination of the reserve money which must always equal the paper output in any solvent community. The country and the banks are making the people pay the price for all the financial machinations, which often rank with gambling of the wildest kind.

Mr. W. L. Taylor is a well-known American artist and illustrator. Thirty of his best pictures are here presented, grouped as "Home scenes," "New England scenes," "Old Southern days" and "Frontier scenes." Each picture is accompanied by the poem or prose narrative that suggested it—a great number of the poems being from Longfellow. An introduction, furnished by William Howe Downes, gives interesting information about the artist and his art.

It is the contention of this book that those who declare the Mexican War unjust base their charges largely upon mere opinion and inference. The Mexican War, in Major Owen's belief, was fought in enforcement of the Monroe doctrine. The methods of many historians of rank and fame are vigorously criticised in this volume.

Owen, Margaret Cunliffe, [Mme. la Marquise de Fontenoy, née Marguerite du Plantz.] The Cradle of the Rose; il. with water-color drawings by the author. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. 320 p. O. cl., $1.50 net. The author of "The martyrdom of an empress" and "The trident and the net" gives us a story of modern Brittany, showing the relations of royalists and republicans and of church and state. The captivating heroine returns after a long absence, as the wife of a British diplomat, to the castle of her forefathers [Roskavel] from which the story takes its translated name. Young and dauntless in spirit, though old in years, she inspires a royalist revolt, wins the devotion of her followers, and the love of a young Breton noble. The tragic ending of the story is in keeping with its setting.

Mr. Page served through the Civil War, being at its conclusion 2d Lieut. Company A. Sixth Michigan Cavalry. He was a prisoner for seven months at Andersonville, where Captain Wirz was a subordinate under Captain Winder, who was the prison commander. He takes the stand that "Captain Wirz was unjustly held responsible for the hardships and mortality of Andersonville." His account of his experience as a prisoner differs greatly from that we have received from many other writers. The book ends with a life of Wirz, his trial and execution.

Based upon public records and testimony of personal witnesses. Dwells specially upon Lee, the man and the Virginian, who, although a devoted soldier of the United States, felt it his duty to fight for his own state of Virginia. The great campaigns of the war are not discussed critically. Lee is described as the greatest character of his time; the sufferings of the South are tragically told and the magnetism of the man who inspired such enthusiasm in his followers is made clear to the reader. The author is himself the son of a Confederate general.

The rare humor and wholesome outlook on life that made "The van dwellers" and "The lucky piece" so entertaining again appear in this story of tent experiences, full of much information of use to the "camper-out." The "tent dwellers" were in a place in Nova Scotia where as yet even the government had made no complete survey. Eddie is a hero and leader full of humor, spice, philosophy and royal good fellowship, and he makes his friends have good times and learn not only of fish and "flies," but also of the political problems of Nova Scotia.

A college story told by one who rowed on the Yale crews of '91, '92 and '93. The story in part hinges on a certain rivalry between the captain and stroke oar of the Yale crew. At a most inopportune moment the stroke oar is practically kidnapped and carried thousands of miles away. After many adventures he gets back to New Haven again only a few days before the great Yale-Harvard boat race and wins the day.

A simple, wholesome American is "the big fellow," big both in height and character. His career is a typical American one, the story following him from the day of his graduation from college through the various steps that carry him to fortune. He is in turn a reporter, lawyer, guide and, eventually, governor of one of our new island possessions, where he accomplishes some big things. There is a very sweet and stirring love story, and a dear old mother and aunt who serve chiefly as background. By the author of "The vagabond."

McClurg & Co., 1908. c. 367 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The date of the beginning of the story is given as April 5, 1879. The man who tells it is John Stephens, aged twenty-four, a native of Massachusetts, who, having gone to South America on business, becomes involved in a revolution on the border of Bolivia. He has fled to Chile, when the story opens, where he finds himself a persona non grata, with every avenue of escape closed to him. A remarkable train of adventures places him in command of an English steam-yacht, which he has innocently helped to steal. The derelict "The Donna Isabel," a treasure ship, supposed to have been lost one hundred years back, plays a ghostly and weird part in the story. There is also a romantic love story.

The action of the story commences in 1768, when the French made easy conquest of Louisiana from the Spaniards, and moves from New Orleans up the Mississippi into a mountain fastness in Arkansas, at that period inhabited by a strange people, the remnant of a prehistoric race once powerful, but now known only through the most fragmentary records. The surprising tale of marvelous exploits is told in Geoffrey Benteen's own language, illuminated by the author's interpretation. By the author of "My lady of the north," etc.

The "Ghosts" was a secret association of London people all moving in the best social set, both men and women, bearing old and honored titles. A charming American girl decided to penetrate the reason for this association and she engages a private detective to help her. A succession of bold burglaries and a series of magnificent donations to public institutions and charities occur almost simultaneously, and the facts are traced to the "Ghosts," who wish to redistribute the riches of the world. The novel satirizes modern, idle society with its morbid thirst for new sensations and its relaxed moral fibre.

A London flat of the present day, with its inmates, is the central point of interest. Here in great luxury live the "master criminal," an intellectual scoundrel, who preys upon society, trying through a plausible philosophy to make himself believe he is not a common thief; and a young man and young woman who pass for his son and daughter. He has trained both in his dishonest ways, Guy, the young man, making as the first step in the "profession" the daring theft of a valuable Greuze. Guy is only saved from utter moral ruin by the discovery that he has been stolen from his real parents. There is clever detective work and a love interest. By the author of "The motor pirate," etc.

Patterson, Burd Shippen. The Head of Iron: a romance of colonial Pennsylvania. Pittsburgh, Pa., T. M. Walker, 1908. c. 8+360 p. pls. O. cl., *$1.20 net.

A story of the founding and naming of Pittsburgh, of which the 150th anniversary is soon to be celebrated. The hero, a young Scot, Graeme Stewart by name, is an aide to Bonnie Prince Charlie in the rebellion of 1745, during which he has a number of exciting adventures. He comes to America and becomes an officer in the Provincial service, serves under Braddock, and is with General John Forbes, known as "The Head of Iron," when, on Nov. 25, 1758, he takes possession of the smoking ruins of Fort Duquesne and confers on the site the name of Pittsburgh.

Patterson, Jos. Medill. A little brother of the rich: a novel. Chic., Reilly & Britton Co., 1908. c. 9-361 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Another story of the idle rich and all the mischief Satan finds for them to do. The author is a man of social, financial and political position, who feels he has a message to make men and women pause and think. The "little brother of the rich" drifts in with the rich set at Harvard University. His college mates secure him a place in the financial world; money becomes his sole thought; he leaves the girl to whom he was devoted, who later becomes an actress and later again becomes an influence in his life. Scene chiefly Newport and New York.

Paul-Dubois, Louis François Alphonse. Contemporary Ireland; with an introd. by T. M. Kettle. N. Y., Baker & Taylor Co., 1908. 15+536 p. O. cl., *$2 net.

M. Paul-Dubois is a nephew of Taine, the historian, and the author of several important works on history and sociology. This is a translation of "L'Irlande contemporaine," published in Paris, 1907. The book is an important study of the Irish question. Starting with an historical survey, the author deals with his subject in three parts: the social and political condition of Ireland at the present day, her material decline, and her possibilities of future intellectual and material regeneration.

Pausanias The Attica of Pausanias; ed. by Mitchell Carroll. Bost., Ginn, [1907. 1908.] c. 7+293 p. O. (College ser. of Greek authors; ed. by J. Williams White, T. Day Seymour and C. Burton Gulick.) cl., $1.65.

Editor is professor of classical philology in the George Washington University. The work is intended for college students. The text offered is that of the Hitzig-Bluemner edition (Berlin, 1896). It is accompanied by a commentary which presents clearly and concisely the latest results of modern research in archaeology. A topical outline enables the student to follow without difficulty the course of the author. The more important topics, such as the Enneacrunus, the Agora, the Acropolis, are treated in a series of excursions and illuminated with a rich supply of maps and plans. A select bibliography (9 p.) presents the more important reference books.

Payson, W: Farquhar. Barry Gordon; il. by Harry Townsend. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. '07. 12+341 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of modern American life, the scene of which is for the most part laid in New York, though some of the action passes at Paris and the concluding scenes in Morocco, at Tangier and in the mountains of the sea coast. Barry Gordon is the son of a Confederate officer; he and his brother Tom both adore the same girl; after she rejects him for his brother he sets forth on a career of reckless dissipation and adventure, which takes him over the entire face of the earth. Tom, on an engineering mission in Morocco, is kidnapped by brigands. Barry accepts the rumors of his brother's death, after a somewhat perfunctory search, comes back and renews his suit successfully with Tom's fiancée. On the very night of their wedding word reaches him that Tom is still alive. The complications that ensue are romantic and intense.

Peple, E: H: The mallet's masterpiece; il. by C. M. Burd. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. c. 69 p. D. cl., 75 c. net, boxed.

A romance of the carving of the "Venus de Milo." In the ancient Greek city of Melos, Philotios and Vasta, rival sculptors, each wrought a masterpiece for a prize offered by King Memmiades. Vasta consumed by jealousy of his rival's art and jealousy of his successful love for Adonia, beloved by both, destroys the sculptured Madonna by knocking off the arms and the babe they hold. Just as Philotios is about to kill Vasta for this act he catches sight of his statue and exclaims: "More beautiful than before! The something for which I sought and could not find."

Peple, E: H: The spitfire; il. by Howard Chandler Christy and J. V. McFall. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. 346 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The "Spitfire" is a ship and also the pet name of the owner's daughter, as good a sailor as her inaccessible father. The latter is accused of cheating the custom house and trading in valuable jewels. One day two strangers come on board showing letters that they shall have charge of the ship. The daughter submits. Then ensues an adventurous voyage and an ending, warning against faith in circumstantial evidence.

"The campaign which forms the subject of this volume is one which has received scant notice in England and has been a good deal misunderstood. The misunderstanding has been mainly due to Napoleon's successful misrepresentation of the earlier part as one of his greatest and most successful efforts. The publication of the full correspondence of the time in Colonel Sasaki's "Campagne de 1809" and General Bonaparte's criticism in his "Manœuvre de Landshut," effectually show that the Emperor was guilty of lapses which did not occur in 1805 or 1806."—Author's Preface.

Author is laureate of the Institute of France, late Chandos professor of anatomy and medicine in the University, St. Andrews. The work deals with many of the more important problems of philosophy and life so keenly discussed of late years not only by scientists, but also by the general public. The author endeavors to show that the combinations of matter, force, mind and consciousness are practically endless. He seeks to prove that inorganic and organic matter, and physical, vital and mental force are not opposed to each other; that a Creator, Prime Mover, or First Cause is necessary to produce dead and living matter, and physical, vital and mental force, and that the same laws, to a large extent, dominate all.

In 1901 the Chicago Library Club issued a "List of serials in public libraries of Chicago and Evanston." Shortly after the founding of the Pennsylvania Library Club Mr. Thomas L. Montgomery suggested the publication of a similar list. The cost was assumed by the trustees of the Free Library of Philadelphia. Twenty-two leading libraries of the city and three in its vicinity are represented in the catalogue. The compilation was begun under Mr. Montgomery, but his appointment as State Librarian of Philadelphia took him from it. The trustees fortunately secured the services of John P. Lamberton, who has completed the work. Government publications have been excluded from the list. About 12,012 serials are on record.

Phillips, D. Graham. Old wives for new: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. c. 6+495 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

Charles Murdock and Sophy Baker fell in love with each other when mere boy and girl and married. When we meet them again, twenty or more years after, they have two grown children, one, a girl, engaged to be married. Murdock has made a fortune and retired from active business. He is still young looking and handsome and still in love with life, but his home is no longer a home to him. He and his wife have grown apart. She has not progressed mentally with him and has lost her good looks and is slovenly and lazy. An old business friend guides him in search of happiness, and a realistic picture is given of the New York "Tenderloin" and members of the demi-monde. A divorce and other unpleasant things result.

Phillipotts, Eden. The mother of the man. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. '07, '08. 8+455 p. front. D. cl., †$1.50.

The author of "Children of the mist" again takes the beautiful Dartmoor country as a setting for his latest romance. It is not a story of intricate plot, but of character painting, of men and women in the humbler walks of life, of the yeoman class chiefly, whose loves and hatreds are set forth in realistic style, against an artistic background of exquisite scenery. Passionate Ives Pomeroy and his wise, wonderful mother, are the leading figures. There are others just as natural, headstrong or scheming, big hearted or mean, just as their natures and heredity have made them.

Phillipotts, Eden. The virgin in judgment. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. c. 6+466 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Again this author shows us the Dartmoor peasants as they live and breathe. The sister of David Bowden, who has always worshipped him (her one love in life), goes to live with him in his married home. Madge, the brother's wife, is whole-souled, warm-hearted, a lover of all her neighbors and lenient with their weaknesses and even sins. The sister has no liking for social relations nor love for anything but animals. She is hard in her judgments and brings about great heartaches through her total lack of human sympathy and readiness to believe in wrong which her sense of duty bids her right. A study of the hardness of ignorant, inexperienced, untempted virtue.

Two great financiers and the prime minister of England meet at the beautiful country seat of the great schemer who is raising money for all the international political games of the world. He has a gorgeous place on which he has built a colossal statue of Energy in woman's form. In this a great feast is held. On the evening after, the owner is murdered. Fascinating detective work, mixed with influencing romance, makes the tale. The secret of the statue comes as a great, ingenious surprise.

Pidgin, C. Felton. Labor or the money god! which?: a story of the times. Bost., Mayhew Publishing Co., 1908. c. 232 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," etc., has introduced within this novel a chapter from the history of the bitter struggle between trade-unions and capital. Richard Melton, the virtual owner of Meltonville, a small milltown, represents the tyrant, whose chief aim in life is personal gain. The mill hands, on being notified of a reduction in their wages, decide to strike. Violence ensues, which results in the destruction of life and property. The final readjustment and the romance make the story.

The author of "Blennerhassett" tells the story of Aaron Burr's brilliant and beautiful daughter Mrs. Theodosia Burr Alston. For nearly a hundred years the actual fate of this young woman has been shrouded in mystery. Many stories have been related claiming to describe the manner of her death, but the present solution seems to be the true one. The author has collected many papers and documents verifying it. This is the first volume in an important historical work to comprise ten volumes, entitled "The great triumvirate: Jefferson—Hamilton—Aaron Burr." Each volume will be complete in itself; all will be written by C: F. Pidgin. Authorities and references (7 p.). Bibliography (7 p.). Personal and topical index.

A young Boston lad, who grows up in a second-hand bookstore, from which his father manages to obtain a mere living, is the relator of the story. The incidents are unsensational and simply told, not without some humor. The characters are reminiscent of Dickens, especially the boy's father and mother. How they all rise from poverty to an unexpected fortune is the plot. A will hidden in an old book lies dormant in the old store for years. It is the last of many, by which a great-uncle bequeathes to the boy half of his fortune.

The story is based upon a crime committed in Kentucky in 1825. The murderer is convicted upon circumstantial evidence and makes no plea for mercy. He suffers the penalty of the law, and only after his death is the real motive for the crime made public. The man had killed the Attorney General of the State because he had dishonored his wife. The facts are modified in the story, the husband and wife committing suicide in the prison. The heart of Kentucky has ever since been faithful to the "unwritten law."

A quarter of a century ago Plato's "Apology" was commonly read in the sophomore year of our colleges. Consequently the edition prepared by Professor Dyer includes many passages from Euripides and Aristophanes for the illustration of Plato. At present, however, the "Apology" is commonly read in the freshman year, before the student has gained any familiarity with the Greek drama. In the revision of this edition, therefore, the matter not suited to the needs of freshmen has been omitted, the notes and the introduction have been simplified, and a concise running paraphrase of the argument has been added.

The interest which has been manifested by investors, capitalists and bankers in schemes for utilizing water power has created a demand for a general treatment of the subject, which deals particularly with the commercial side of such enterprises. The idea of this book is to indicate, as far as possible, the information which should be obtained in order to afford a definite basis for forming a decision as to the merits of any proposed undertaking, avoiding a discussion of principles of engineering which have been very thoroughly treated by a number of writers.

The little girl Margaret, whose story was related in "Cross currents" published last year, is again the heroine. It will be remembered that when four years old she strayed from her rich mother in New York and was lost, living for four years in the slums with the poorest people, often not having enough to eat. In this book she is restored to her mother. But a short time afterward her mother dies, and she spends the years till she is twenty-one in school. Then, with the memory of her four years in New York, her heart goes back to her slum friends, and she determines to work for the down-trodden and friendless. Her love story is full of interest.

Post, Van Zo. Retz. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. 344 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A dashing story of love and adventure. Count Retz, the hero, is a young German nobleman, who leaves his home at an early age and goes to Flanders to seek service at the court of Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, then the greatest monarch in western Europe. Rich, handsome and fearless, he soon has the whole town of Bruges at his feet and succeeds in gaining the Duke's permission to try to rid Flanders of a long-standing pest, the Robber Barons of the low-Rhine. His brilliant victory and his further career in France fill many chapters with picturesque details.

An interesting introduction gives a general discussion of the fundamental principles of beauty and health. Much of the book is concerned with reasonable and common-sense rules, and suggestions as to the care of the body. The nature and use of cosmetics and "beautifiers," harmful and harmless, are discussed frankly and fully. Many valuable prescriptions and practices noted and gathered by the author during her extended travels and stage experiences are here given for the benefit of her fellow women. These have either been tried by her with success or were vouched for by competent authority.

"A new method for Cæsar" was first published separately in 1907. See notice, "Weekly Record," P. W., Oct. 5, 1907, [1862.]

Potter, Margaret Horton, [now Mrs. J. D. Black.] The golden ladder: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1908 c. 433 p. D cl., †$1.50.

A story of struggle between love and money-getting. John Kildare comes as a youth from a Wisconsin farm to Chicago, steps on the lowest rung of the golden ladder, and in the cheap boarding-house where he lives encounters Kitty Clephane, a wilful girl of seventeen, and intends to marry her. But she, through self-love, is lured to New York and there takes up with new lovers, while Kildare rises to power in the New York financial world. Kitty makes a final effort to enmesh him but is baffled, and ends along the road she began; while Kildare, although he has achieved his end, goes on his way a restless millionaire. By the author of "The genius," etc.

Potter, Mary Knight. How Richard won out: a story; frontispiece il. by W. P. Stecher. Bost., W. A. Wilde, [1908.] c. 231 p. D. cl., †75 c.

Richard is a little lame boy of about fourteen, who comes east to live with his father's two maiden aunts. He is an orphan, and the aunts do not make him very welcome because his mother was an actress. He has his cousin Rosamund for a companion, a dear little girl, who is his loyal friend all through. His school experience, the friends he makes, and finally his conquest of the stern aunts' hearts, make the story.

Pottle, Emery Bemsley. Handicapped. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head.) 1908. c. 3-267 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The hero, Donovan O'Hara, is handicapped through the circumstances of his birth and dual inheritance.

His father, a handsome horse jockey, eloped with his mother, a beautiful refined woman, who died heartbroken when Donovan was seven years old. The boy had grown up with little education or polish but with his mother's beauty, and with no knowledge of gaining a living except with horses. He is a strange mixture of his mother's refinement and his father's brutal nature. The turning point in his life is when he meets and loves a refined girl. Vivid description of New York Horse Show.

Twin sisters, so alike that they can deceive the husband of one, are the heroines. One has the drug habit and is helped in her downward career by her physician, also a victim. The other twin is wholly good, but she yields to her love for her sister's husband. The sister returns, the end is tragic. A priest has much to do in influencing the good sister in her self-justification. A beautiful English country place is the scene.

Pratt, Ambrose. Vigorous Daunt: billionaire; il. by Stanley L. Wood. N. Y., R. F. Fenno & Co., [1908.] c. 5-380 p. D. cl., *$1 net.

The man who relates the story had travelled all over Europe with a Chicago millionaire and his wife and daughter as a gentleman courier and interpreter. The daughter falls in love with him and he is discharged. He is offered a large sum of money by a German official to go to France and sketch her frontier defences. Here he meets Daunt, who guesses his business and makes it worth his while to give up his not very creditable employment and take a position as his secretary. The adventures these two worthies have together exceed in originality anything in recent fiction. While startling they are unintentionally very funny.

Price, W. Thompson. The analysis of play construction and dramatic principle. N. Y., W. T. Price, [1908.] c. 6+415 p. O. cl., $5.

This book is designed as a text-book of systematic instruction in the art of playwriting. It discusses and formulates dramatic principle anew and brings the study down to the methods used in the workshop of the practical dramatist. In the opening chapter it is contended that by no possibility can any human being be born a playwright—with a knowledge of the technique of the art, which must be learned. By the author of "The technique of the drama."

In 1903 a committee was appointed to make arrangements for the proper observance of this semi-centennial anniversary. It was decided the most fitting anniversary memorial would be a book containing as much as possible about the craft in Providence. The work of research was conscientiously performed and information concerning men and events preceding the organization of the Union in 1857 was diligently sought from old printers' files of the Typographical Journal, old city directories, etc. Establishing an 8 hour day in the craft with its heavy financial burdens delayed the collecting of money, it was decided no advertisements should be taken, and thus the book appears a little after the day of the anniversary. A most interesting souvenir volume and full of valuable history and experience for all printers.

Lord Beiley, at last makes up his mind to marry his old friend Lady Sally Sallis, only child of the Earl of Hexgrove. The preparations weary him and bored with inspecting wedding presents he wanders off the day before the wedding for rest. He falls in with a troupe of actors, gets intoxicated, and when recovered finds he has missed his wedding-day. He dares not meet Lady Sally, and he hides under different names, making his living at rock-splitting, sheep-herding, tramping with street musicians, etc. The details are impossible but entertaining. Lady Sally plays an unknown part in his career of banishment. The end is Lord Beiley's repentance and Lady Sally's pardon.

The Encyclical Letter of Pius x. given at Rome, September 8, 1907, dealt with the doctrines of Modernists. The Pope explains that "the Modernist sustains and includes within himself a manifold personality—he is a philosopher, a believer, a theologian, a historian, a critic, an apologist, a reformer. These rôles must be clearly distinguished one from another by all who would grasp the outcome of their doctrines." This Letter was answered by men within the Catholic church who are now excommunicated and suspended. They attempt to gather together all the assured results of biblical and historical criticism and to prove that the Church of Rome will only lose by not taking into consideration the growing knowledge of the world, which cannot interfere with a deep spiritual faith in Christianity.

Author is instructor in history at Mount Holyoke College. While taking a course of lectures on the history of the English poor law she became interested in the law of parochial settlement and its effect upon mobility of the workingman. She gives an account of such law of settlement and of its final repeal during the era of the abolition of the Corn laws. This monograph gives the results of a detailed investigation of the methods by which the parochial settlement laws were enforced. The manuscript sources of the Public Record Office, London, furnish the chief facts. Appendix: 1, Account of sources, 3 p.; Documents extracts from documents, Lists and tables, 458 p. Ruth Putnam is the author of "William the Silent" in this same series. The admission of her present subject among the "Heroes of the nations" she says, "is justified by his relation to events rather than by his national or his heroic qualities." And further—"Yet in spite of the failure to obtain either a kingly or an imperial crown the story of those same unaccomplished enterprises contains the germ of much that has happened later in the borderland of France and Germany where the projected 'middle kingdom' might have been erected. A sketch of the duke's character with its traits of ambition and shortcomings may therefore be placed, not unfitly, among the pen portraits of individuals who have attempted to change the map of Europe." Randall, F. J. Love and the ironmonger. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 309 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A young clerk of great ambition accidentally hears the head of his firm telling three separate employees that he has remembered them in his will for £500 a year provided they will rid themselves of their besetting sins—sordidness, lying and drinking. The employer dies; the men inherit but do not change. The wily clerk contrives to get quite a fine living for himself out of his fellow clerks. The daughter of the testator becomes head of the firm—and thereby hangs the tale.

The four little girls who set up housekeeping in the tumbledown "Dandelion cottage" are again the heroines of a story. The cottage was their play-house in vacation time, and they tried to do everything "like mother did." To entirely complete their happiness they had to have babies about, which they borrowed. One baby, a stolid little Indian borrowed for a day, is never claimed. Her fate and fortunes make up the story. All the queer complexities that arise from her being hidden in Dandelion cottage are related in a delightfully humorous way.

Ray, Anna Chapin. Quickened. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1908. c. 358 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The son of a New York millionaire becomes so involved in speculation that only by flight can he avoid exposure and arrest. Therefore under an assumed name he joins a party of Catholics who are setting out on a pilgrimage to the Church of Sainte Anne de Beupré near Quebec. But with him also goes the one man who knows the story of his crime and has penetrated his disguise. In Quebec Thorne Alstrom takes up a new life, makes new friends, French-Canadian and English, and comes under the influence of the Catholic church. Religious faith and human love strengthen him to abandon finally his life of deception, even though it may cost him his earthly happiness. Reynolds, Mrs. L. Baillie, [formerly Gertrude M. Robins.] The supreme test. N. Y., Brentano's, 1908. c. 342 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The heroine is a charming young woman, heiress to a large fortune, which makes her the victim of fortune hunters. She has broken two engagements, believing the men are interested in winning her money more than herself, and is about to enter into a third, but before giving her word insists upon being left to herself for a time until she can be certain of her feelings. So she goes on a visit to an intimate school friend, who has charge of the house of a well-to-do widower with three children. He at first thinks the girl wicked and shocking—but gradually falls deeply in love with her. "The supreme test" is met finally.

Told in the first person by a man who becomes the inmate of the home of a poor fisherman on the Devonshire coast, not merely as a lodger, but as one of the family who shares the trials, fears, dangers and little recreations of the hard-working fishermen and their worn-out, half-starved wives and children. The constant dangers of the sea, the only source of income, are graphically pictured.

Mr. Rhoades holds that there is a great drawback, a very real peril, in the present increase of learning, multiplication of subjects, systematization of methods, and cataclysm of school books. He believes, in fact, that we are in danger of trusting too much to books and systems, too little to the living influence of mind on mind; too much to the rapidity of learning, too little to development of power; that we are in danger of organizing the soul out of education, of making it mechanical, and, therefore, barren; of a tendency to look at the accumulation of facts as an adequate result, though they may lie like lead in the brain that bears them.

Lady Angela, a clever romantic girl, aids Charles Edward in his erratic schemes, all of which are punctuated with incidents extremely ludicrous.

Based on the assumption that we are all asleep, that even when waking we are merely "dreaming out aloud," and it offers a system of spiritual gymnastics designed to awaken the slumbering soul to cosmic consciousness. This system goes back to the method of the Buddhist adepts for its foundation. Conscious control of breathing is advocated as the first step in the process of waking the soul from its sleep. Through breathing, we are told, the brain may gain control of the solar plexus and thus transmute animal instincts into spiritual power.

The characters of this entertaining story are the young members of two families. The Townsends of Worthington Square are wealthy and fashionable and occupy a beautiful home. Their children, however, have known little real pleasure in their lives until the Bells move "round the corner in Gay Street." The Bells are not rich but refined and well educated, the young people active and healthy, full of fun and many interests. A series of incidents brings the families together. The story tells of their many good times, of the influence they have upon each others lives, and of their loves and weddings.

Claims to be an inside and by no means flattering view of Wall St. morals in love and finance. That the law of "might" and not of "right" prevails there is what the story aims to illustrate; also that no man can ever again obtain "a job" there once he betrays its secrets. The plot hinges upon a mysterious murder in a fashionable hotel, in which two unfaithful wives are involved. The murderer or murderers are never arrested, the "law of might" protecting them, as their exposure would expose other Wall Street brokers or their wives.

A middle-aged spinster became guardian to a niece and nephew, aged 11 and 13 respectively. After thirteen years these inherit their mother's fortune, but stay with the dear, old fussy aunt, who tells the story. She takes a country house of vast dimensions, 22 rooms and 5 bathrooms, to accommodate their friends. She herself tells the story of the murder committed one night on the circular staircase in that house. Circumstantial evidence, and the various offences of the niece and nephew, fill the story. A marvellous detective draws out the aunt's evidence.

An exquisite, exotic woman, who has endured the misery of unhappy marriage, is dominated by a mystical belief that love must have no physical fulfilment. This woman comes to love one man utterly, and he—in the ecstasy of midsummer, under the spell of a beautiful country home—is momentarily able to stand on the woman's high ground of Platonic passion. Called abroad, from leaving her with wild regret he returns—indifferent. A chance encounter in a New York theatre lobby tells him his dream is over. "The golden rose" is the symbol of the woman's unrealized dream.

Author of "The magnetic north" again makes the spell of the Northland luring men on to cruel struggle, perhaps to failure and death, the dominating note of this story, with scenes both in California and Alaska. Nathaniel Mar, who has been in Nome in '65 and found gold there, is drawn back years after when broken and crippled. Jack Galbraith, traveller and discoverer, sacrifices friends and the girl he loves in his quest not for gold, but for the North Pole. Mar's daughter, Hildegard, starts alone for Alaska to find her father, and there in that wonderful North light learns to appreciate the faithful, patient love of Cheviot, who has followed her in order to protect her. The hero worship of Hildegard and Bella for the unknown Galbraith is a compelling factor in the plot. Has been running serially in The Century.

Since the age of eighteen Count Renzo Belluci had built up a reputation for being the most lawless of a race old in lawlessness. One of his victims became a woman of the great world. After many years she brought about a marriage with her step-daughter, a mysterious woman, who never spoke and always embroidered. They lived among the Swiss Alps and the Count grew to hate and fear his uncanny, silent wife. The end is tragedy. By the author of "The magnetic North."

Both authors are professors in Columbia University, the first of history, the second being adjunct professor of politics. These volumes are intended to meet the demand for a history of recent times which shall explain the social and economic as well as the political development of our own age, and shall also prepare the student to understand the great problems of the world. Their aim is to correct the general disregard of recent history—to enable the reader to catch up with his own times so that he may peruse with intelligence the news given in the morning paper. The more fundamental economic matters—the industrial revolution, commerce and the colonies, the internal reforms of the European states, etc., have been generously treated.

A story of crime and mystery; the scene is laid at Homburg, one of Germany's most fashionable watering places, in the height of the summer season. Suddenly with a thrill of horror and excitement the news spread that the young Lord Farrington, a popular English nobleman, has been found murdered in the Park. The investigation of the crime and the trial are given in detail. The circumstantial evidence involves the magistrate hearing the case, and he resigns. Many facts are brought out in which a woman figures, and while they cast suspicion on several do not positively fix the crime on anyone.

Professor Ross disarms criticism by his frankness at the outset. "The time has come," he says, "to hand over the results of my reflections to my fellow workers, in the hope of provoking discussions which will part the wheat from the chaff and set it to producing an hundred fold." It is in this spirit that the author proceeds to consider the nature and scope of social psychology, the problems of suggestibility, the mob mind, conventionality and imitation, conditions affecting the sway of customs, interference and conflict, union and accumulation, compromise, public opinion.

Traces the lives of two young people who grow up near together in happy Catholic homes, in which lovely mothers are the chief influence. After the mother of Austin Mansfield dies his troubles are added to by the unexpected marriage again of his father. His father for a long time had held a mortgage on John Naughton's farm. After Naughton, who is the father of the girl Austin loves, has found coal on the farm the mortgage is foreclosed. There is suspicion of double dealing, the families are estranged, years passing before the young people are again brought together.

Rowbotham, Francis Jameson. Story-lives of great musicians. N. Y., Frederick A. Stokes Co., [1908.] 12+3-369 p. il. por O. cl., $1.50.

Following the plan of his previous volume of "Great authors," the writer has woven into more or less story form a few of the facts and incidents in the lives of some great musicians. The subjects of the seven stories are: Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, and Mendelssohn. A list of the principal compositions of each musician is given at the end of the story devoted to him.

An original and suggestive discussion of municipal questions by an eminent authority—the professor of political science, University of Pennsylvania. The purpose is to present an analysis of the general principles involved in city growth. The rapid development of large cities has a far deeper significance than the administrative problems which they present. Profound changes in social structures are directly traceable to this increasing aggregation of population and here an attempt is made to ascertain the nature of these changes. Index.

Mr. Rowland and his two friends had a motor boat constructed in London for a seven-thousand-mile inland voyage which should circle Europe by way of the Seine, the Rhine, the Danube, and the Black Sea. The struggle with the motor, which develops a degree of perversity almost human, the innumerable humorous and exciting incidents, and the final terrific adventure which ends the narrative with a shipwreck in the Black Sea are described with enthusiasm.

The present book grew out of the author's academic work in connection with Harvard University, in lecturing to teachers upon certain ethical aspects of their profession. Later the ideas were further formulated into a course of lectures before the Lowell Institute. Professor Royce speaks of his work as "simply an appeal to any reader who may be fond of ideals, and who may also be willing to review his own ideals in a somewhat new light and in a philosophical spirit." He bids the reader to free his mind from the ordinary meaning attached to the word "loyalty," and to think of it as the central spirit of the moral and reasonable life of man.

The first American biography of the English boy poet. Mr. Russell relates the strange story of Chatterton's life and at the same time throws an entirely new light upon it. While preparing for his work he made many visits to Bristol (where Chatterton was born and educated) and studied there and elsewhere all the available records of the passing of this spirit whom Rossetti placed among the five lights of English song. His book is a demonstration that Chatterton has been unjustly treated. The startling revelation of another hand in the preparing of the so-called "Chatterton forgeries" is given for the first time.

The Rev. W: T. Russell is the secretary of Cardinal Gibbons, who furnishes a preface. The following claim is made for the work: The rise of religious toleration in America dates from the landing of the Maryland Pilgrims at St. Clement's Island, March 25, 1634. This religious toleration inaugurated by Catholics was interrupted by the Puritan Rebellion in 1652 and afterwards by the Episcopalian Revolution in 1692. As long as Catholics were in control of the government the fullest religious liberty was granted to all the inhabitants. This is shown from original documents given in appendices taken from the archives of the State and the Archiepiscopal Library, Baltimore, many of which have never before been published. "From 1799 to 1840 there was hardly in England a distinguished man in politics, science or literature who had not been a guest at Holland House." It is to that period, when the mansion, despite the strong Whig leanings of its host and hostess, formed a temple of merit where men of all parties and professions could meet on common ground, that this volume is chiefly devoted. But something is said as well of the earlier Holland House which witnessed the magnificence of Rich, the death of Addison, and the boyhood of Charles James Fox. Macaulay has brought three of the frequenters of Holland House before us, namely, Wilkie, Mackintosh and Talleyrand. The group can be enlarged almost indefinitely by the additions of Rogers, Byron, Moore, Lord John Russell, Lord Melbourne, Lord Dudley, the witty Luttrell, the wittier Sydney Smith, and many more.

Sands, Beatrice. Weepers in playtime. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. c. 10+265 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The title is drawn from Elizabeth B. Browning's "But the young, young children, O, my brothers,

They are weeping bitterly;

They are weeping in the playtime of the others
In the country of the free."

The book is a plea for the betterment of the life of the inmates of our so-called "Homes" for homeless children. The heroine, Eleanor, while on her wedding tour in Italy, makes the dreadful discovery that her husband is already married. She returns to New York to the home of her mother, Mrs. Schuyler, where her baby is born. Mrs. Schuyler has the child sent away to an institution, telling Eleanor it is dead. In her great sorrow Eleanor tries to find comfort by bringing happiness into the lives of the children in a Home, and there she befriends her own baby, whom she does not know. In spite of great opposition she works many needed changes in the management of various homes and institutions, where the children have always been treated impersonally and unsympathetically. Mrs. Schuyler, thinking her own death is near, confesses to Eleanor, who discovers her own daughter in the child she befriended.

Author is assistant in the clinic of Hofrat von Neusser, Vienna. He believes the study of pain to be the starting point of the diagnostic train of reasoning because it is often the first evidence of disease, because careful consideration of the patient's own sensations is essential where comprehensive investigation of all objective symptoms is impossible, and because it is this very symptom of pain that impels the patient to seek medical advice. The book is intended to serve as a guide in the rapid and correct interpretation and successful treatment of the pain occurring in internal diseases.

Some ambitious English people repeatedly invite her to visit them hoping to attract attention to themselves by the great beauty of their protégée, and when she is fifteen years old she is allowed to stay with them in Italy. At first all is delightful, but when the Tower Angel, as the child is called, falls ill and loses her beauty, her patrons lose interest in her. She is glad at last to return to her own true friends.

Caspar Schwenckfeld was the founder of a sect of Protestant mystics who held doctrines between those of Luther and Zwingli. They were hunted both by Catholics and Protestants. Schwenckfeldians are still found in many places. A small community exists near Philadelphia and this book is their history. According to the Encyclopædia Britannica their views are substantially those of the English Society of Friends. Schwenckfeld lived from 1490 to 1561. The book is written with German thoroughness and when finished will be a valuable asset in the history of religions.

The author of "A fountain sealed" again writes an English story, embracing a remarkable character study. Its heroine is a young innocent girl, married to a man of the world greatly her senior. He neglects her cruelly, and she cannot love him. For a brief time she yields to her mad infatuation for a young artist, going away with him to Paris, but leaving him in a little while, knowing he is the father of her coming child. She confesses all to her husband, who generously shields her name, although they separate, she going to live on one of his lonely estates, he still leading his dissolute life. The story is chiefly of her life with and love for her son, with other startling events that occur when the boy learns his true story.

Bost., Ball Publishing Co., 1908. c. 598 p. O. cl., *$1.50 net.

The first part of this work was entitled "Gillette's Social redemption." See American Catalog, 1905-'07, v. 2, 1907. It dealt with existing world-wide conditions and endeavored to show the dangerous trend of affairs. Events since have justified its prophecies. Mr. King (who by the way is the inventor of Gillette's Safety-Razors) claims that present social conditions are capable of radical improvements and that the sufferings of mankind could be eradicated by a proper social régime in which there shall be no rights without duties, and no duties without rights. He outlines a type of socialism that needs no capital and could be started by three earnest men.

In "The Lamb Shakespeare for the young," based on Mary and Chas. Lamb's "Tales from Shakespeare," of which "The tempest" and "As you like it" are the first two issues, an attempt is made to insert skilfully within the setting of prose those scenes and passages from the play with which the young reader should quite early become acquainted. It is believed that this form of presenting the chief plays to the young will, in accordance with a widely-expressed wish from many educational experts, commend itself to teachers and others. Professor I. Gollancz has consented to be responsible for the series. Each volume will be illustrated by artists who will endeavor to reproduce the chief scenes of the action as they would be visualized by the young, while a further feature will be made of songs from the plays set to the best music arranged for school use under the direction of T. Maskell Hardy.

At Gertrude Elliot's coming of age she is informed by her guardian—her father's dearest friend—that he has robbed her of every penny of her large fortune and that his son, who had claimed to love Gertrude, is also a dishonest man. With an almost divine pity she forgives the pair, keeps her loss a secret, and gives them a chance to redeem the past. She obtains a position as housekeeper in a rich family and successfully earns a living until the dislike of a servant throws suspicion upon her of being a thief. The story ends happily. The men win back her fortune and she has offered to her the disinterested love of an honest man. By the author of "Katherine's sheaves," etc.

In his introduction the author, who is adjunct professor of history, Columbia University, New York, says: "So far as the scope of the present guide is concerned the term 'Spanish archives' has reference only to the three repositories indicated on the title-page." . . . "The plan of presentation will comprise an introductory sketch of each repository and its contents in general, a statement of any special rules governing the use of its documents, a bibliography, and a formal description of such materials only as bear upon the history of the United States." A list of documents in these Spanish archives, of which transcripts exist in American libraries or archives and which was to be included in this volume, is in preparation. Contains index and bibliography.

Shield, Alice. Henry Stuart, Cardinal of York, and his times; with an introd. by Andrew Lang. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1908. 16+353 p. pls. O. cl., *$3.50 net.

The life of the last grandson of James II., known as Henry Stuart, Cardinal York, "Duke of York" or

"Henry ix." He died on July 13, 1807; with him ended the Stuart dynasty. "The book," the author says, "was completed some time before the 'King over the water' (of which she was joint-author), but it was judged better to keep it back until the son's life should follow as a sequel to the father's. Both have come from the same long and careful research. Until 1766 the lives naturally overlap. Incidents common to both lives that are given at length in King James' life are noted here as briefly as possible; that the biography should be complete in itself; while much that was taken from the former place, to keep within the limits of the volume, finds place here." By the author of "The law of life." Another story of American life and American thought showing keen observation. Its keynote is that there is no escape from the consequences of an offense against the laws governing the sexes, no matter how extenuating the circumstances may be. The chief characters are Mrs. Valgrave, a noted portrait painter, and her lovely daughter Constance. After living for many years in Paris, Mrs. Valgrave returns to her old home a very rich woman. Her secret purpose is to marry off her daughter where her story is not known. How it affects Constance when she learns the true story of her father and the expiation of her mother are most pathetic.

Author is associate professor of public speaking in the University of Texas. This book, the result of practical experience in the classroom, has been prepared to supply a treatise on extempore speaking, primarily for school and college students. While the subject has been fully treated in other works, few are adapted for use as text-book. The aim here is to present the subject in a manner adapted to the needs of both teachers and students by reclassifying principles and methods, making the methods as specific in treatment as possible. At the end of each chapter and in an appendix suggestions and topics for class exercises are given. A large number of modern speeches have been incorporated.

Kedar Kross was the name of a beautiful old home in the Adirondack country in the year 1837. The story relates to the stealing of the owner's little son, and to the disappearance a few years afterwards of his wife, who is supposed to have wandered away while temporarily insane. The owner of Kedar Kross almost ruins himself seeking his son and wife—and it is not until twenty years of suspense and unhappiness have past that the three come together again.

Mrs. Sidgwick, well known by "The kinsman" and other bright novels, has lived most of her life in England, but she was born of German parents and has therefore the double advantage of entire sympathy with the German character and the impartial eyes of a foreigner. Apparently she has seen every phase of German home life, and seems to have neglected none. She is equally interesting whether she writes of the poor or of the rich, the provincial or the city bred; and has a talent for dealing with facts in a witty way. Author is professor of Latin and literature in New York University and sometime fellow in Greek at Johns Hopkins University. He sets forth what was the course and character of the religion and worship, of the morality and conduct of the Greeks and Romans among whom the church of Christ came up; and he presents, very largely in the exact words of their most eminent writers, in versions made for this work, their views or aspirations concerning the soul, life and death, God and the world, in short, what may be designated as the spiritual elements in classic civilization. He wishes to impress on classicists and clergymen the large extent of their common domain.

Silberrad, Una Lucy. Desire. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1908. 376 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The story of a beautiful, wholly unconventional woman who lives a totally selfish life, devoted to pleasure in her rich father's house until his death. Her one trial is her stepmother. Her father dies intestate; the stepmother leaves her home, the girl learns business and becomes clerk for a pottery establishment. The family owning this business are at war among themselves. Love comes to Desire, changes her whole nature. She and the younger potter take up life together, wholly sufficient to each other, disregarding all the world can offer and all the world can say.

Sinclair, Bertrand W. Raw gold: a novel; il. by Clarence H. Rowe. N. Y., George W. Dillingham Co., [1908.] 7-311 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

A story of adventure in the Northwest in the year 1874. The brave deeds of the famous mounted police of that date are woven into the narrative. They had been sent from Canada to enforce the law in a territory given over to a lot of "tough" people. The holding up of a party returning from a profitable horse sale is the opening incident. They are robbed of $10,000, and one of their friends murdered. Before his death he tells of a place where he has buried bags of "raw gold." Several parties try to dig this up, with several resulting fights.

Sinclair, May. The immortal moment: the story of Kitty Tailleur; il. and decorated by C. Coles Phillips. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1908. c. 315 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Kitty Tailleur is a young woman of a varied past staying in a hotel on the English coast. When gossip assails her and her paid companion even deserts her she discovers warm friends in a brother and sister, the Lucys. Lucy is a widow with two children. After agreeing to marry him Kitty Tailleur's "immortal moment" comes—her soul is born when she gives Lucy up for the sake of his children. Marston, whom she has known before Lucy, also begs to make her his wife. She solves her problems by a tragedy.

he shall rule over thee" is the judgment of Eve, on which the story turns. A meek and loving wife encourages selfishness and unconscious neglect in her husband. Her household of many children and the endless work made necessary by small means wear her out, while he seeks recreation and follows out his individual aspirations untrammelled by the cares for which he is largely responsible. A psychological study based on most realistic circumstances. Gotten up as a gift-book with dainty borders, but should be presented with discrimination. First published in Everybody's.

Sinclair, Upton Beall, jr. The metropolis. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. c. '07, '08. 376 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

While "The jungle," by the same author, was a study of the extremes of poverty, "The metropolis" is a study of certain developments in that luxurious society which has followed upon our sudden and enormous increase of concentrated wealth. The story has its scene in a certain section of New York society, the time being the present. The mad extravagance of spending, and at times the almost grotesque methods of living and obtaining amusement, seem pictures from real life.

Sinclair, Upton Beall, jr. The money changers. N. Y., B. W. Dodge & Co., 1908. c. 316 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The second novel in a trilogy of which "The Metropolis" was the first and "The machine" will be the third. The characters of "The Metropolis" reappear in "Moneychangers." Montague, the young Southern lawyer who had his eyes opened to facts in "The Metropolis," becomes president of a railroad managed by a trust. His cousin comes to New York with millions which he loses under circumstances that betray the methods of trusts. The great panic of 1907 is described, the author of "The jungle" evidently maintaining through his mouthpiece, a newspaper reporter, that this panic was planned by the great millionaire moneychangers of the metropolis to stop the President's action towards the trusts.

Not only does she show her tourist the best which the many large galleries contain, blending criticism with concise biographical sketches, but she calls his attention to the living type, the interiors and exteriors of buildings, pictures of still-life in the villages, country-houses reminiscent of Pieter de Hooch, and the like. Altogether, she has succeeded in formulating a handbook which presents an amazing amount of information, and thus enables the student to plan his visits to the galleries with the greatest economy of time.

Smith, Eleanor. The Eleanor Smith music course. Bk. 1. N. Y., American Book Co., [1908.] c. 112 p. O. cl., 25 c.

The author has endeavored to present music which shall assist in the best technical and artistic training possible to young children. Some of the songs have been composed for the book, others have been gleaned from the children's song-literature of many nations, and folk tunes, as well as less easy songs by eminent composers, have been included.

Smith, Eleanor. The Eleanor Smith music course. Bk. 3. N. Y., American Book Co., [1908.] c. 192 p. O. cl., 40 c.

The principles animating choice and arrangement of music for the preceding books of this course have been closely adhered to in making Book 3. Only songs have been admitted which have charm and excellence of quality. A logical succession of technical problems has been presented, with an abundance of material for their solution. While American composers have contributed largely to the book, it will be found to contain both folk-songs and songs in artistic form from many nations.

Smith, Eleanor. The Eleanor Smith music course. Bk. 4. N. Y., American Book Co., [1908.] c. 255 p. O. cl., 50 c.

The contents of the present volume will be found a consistent working-out of the plan adopted in the earlier books of the series. Although studies are not lacking, technical points are worked out chiefly by means of songs, and sufficient song material is furnished to fix technical points. Both music and poetry have been chosen with regard to beauty as well as appropriateness.

From the moment Santa Claus wakes and leaves the north pole to investigate the little boys and girls of earth there is the thrill of Christmas in the pictures. There is the hum of the workshop where his little men fashion the toys, the drive over moonlight snow with bulging pack, and finally Christmas dawn and the stockings—and the smiling good-bye of the jolly saint at the window.

Smith, Ernest Ashton. Hildebrand: the builder. Cin., Jennings & Graham, [1908.] c. 7-219 p. D. (Men of the kingdom.) cl., *$1 net.

Author is professor of history, Allegheny College. The subject of this biography is Gregory VII, known as Saint Hildebrand. He was born at Saona, Tuscany, about 1020; died at Salerno, Italy, May 25, 1085. He was of obscure birth, and first came into notice as chaplain to Gregory VI, succeeding him as Pope in 1073, until his death in 1085. His reforms within the Catholic church, and his introduction of broad and most intelligent changes in ecclesiastical rules, serving to build the Papacy, earned him the name of "the builder."

Smith, Francis Hopkinson. Peter: a novel of which he is not the hero; il. by A. I. Keller. N. Y., Scribner, 1908. c. 482 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Peter Grayson was receiving teller in a well-established old bank in Wall St. He was a delightful, middle-aged man of good family, dearly loving young people, who remained faithful to his comfortable apartment on Fifteenth St. long after the neighborhood had been given over to business. While not the hero, he is a strong influence in the life of the hero, an attractive young man, who comes up from Maryland to take a position in his uncle's stock broking office in Wall St. Disgusted after a few months with the business he seeks Peter's advice. His struggles to make his way in the world and his love affairs are related in a sympathetic way that is very real. The story is a clean, wholesome one, not without its moral.

This book is the outgrowth of the study of three questions: the development of line traffic, the combinations among carriers to control rates, and the combination of steamship lines and railways. It is an economic study of ocean service telling not so much of the dimensions of ships and their dates of building as of what they carried, where they carried it, for whom, at what rate, and under what method of management, things seldom told by writers on maritime topics. Widely scattered material from old newspapers, old trunks and private correspondence has been drawn upon for these important facts.

Statistical information on public schools has grown until it is the despair of the student. The authors have examined the reports of upwards of 100 American cities with a view to finding methods of presenting facts of educational policy which would actually serve school administration. They aim to show how a board of education can devise a report which will become a source, both of publicity in the best sense and also a means of improving the quality and economizing the means of education. Dwells upon what the public should demand of boards in order to know whether the school system which their taxes support is such as a modern community has a right to demand.

Mr. Spears prior to this book has written two works on the navy. The first of these was the "History of our navy," in five volumes, giving an exhaustive and authoritative treatment of the subject. Then his "Short history of the American navy" telling the exploits of our sailors in a very brief narrative. The present volume stands midway between these two works. The author in preparing it "has been animated to tell, in one convenient volume, that might be sold at a moderate price, the whole story of our navy—to describe all the important naval battles, and to show how the nation has been affected at certain times by the work of its naval ships, and at other times by the want of such a force."

With a fund of information and pleasant style of recounting, the author tells the story of the once romantic source of New England's wealth. From the time of the early coast whaling to the days when Yankee fleets scoured the frozen seas to the north, and far to the south towards Africa, one breathes the salt of the sea and hears the tales of the gallant barques from the mouths of their brave captains. Gone are the days of adventure, the cruel crimp system and almost the fleets—there are only forty ships now, eighteen sailing from San Francisco.

Standard (The) handbook for electrical engineers; written and comp. by a staff of specialists. N. Y., McGraw Publishing Co., 1908. c. '07. 20+1283 p. diagrs., tabs., S. mor., *$4 net.

In preparing this handbook the publishers adapted the "unit" system to bookmaking. The entire field of electrical engineering was divided into twenty sections or units, each complete in itself. These twenty sections were arranged in what seemed to be a logical order and each was assigned to a specialist. Each author was supplied with a detailed outline of all the sections, thus avoiding repetitions and duplications of material as far as possible. All the material thus brought together was carefully edited to obtain uniformity of style, symbols, abbreviations, units, etc., and to connect the various parts by cross references.

Stanley, Bp. E: Before and after Waterloo: letters from Edward Stanley; ed. by Jane H. Adeane and Maud Grenfell. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. 320 p. pls. pors. cl., *$3.75 special net.

This book is made up of the letters of a famous English bishop, written during one of the most interesting decades of history, that of the Battle of Waterloo. The first of the letters records a tour of France, Northern Italy and Spain, made by Bishop Stanley in 1802-3. There are some piquant pictures of French life and many intimate observations of the people, their customs, dress, habits, etc., and their fear of Napoleon. In 1814, just before the Battle of Waterloo, Bishop Stanley again visited France and it is in his letters written at that time that the interest of the book centres.

Author explains that the first principle of production is necessity; the second is the reservation of sufficient of the product of the soil to generate its succession; the third is that livelihood must follow the channel of consumption. From these premises he gives a dissertation on all the conditions of livelihood imposed on man by nature—soil, climate, physical surroundings and all the conditions imposed by competitive man. Deals with the questions of population, punishment for crime, the negro problem and with all that is occupying the minds of economists and philanthropists.

The Curator of the anthropological section of the Walker Museum, University of Chicago, has already done notable field work in ethnography and physical anthropology, especially in Mexico. He was early impressed with the noticeable differences between the tribes of Southern Mexico and has now made a serious study of their types. Lumholtz's "Unknown Mexico" is the only travel book in English this far that covers a portion of the same country. The author confines himself to ethnography. He has measured 100 men and 25 women in each tribe; has made photographs—portraits, dress, occupations, buildings, landmarks; and has plaster busts made of five individuals in each tribe. In this book he writes for the general reader, but in his preface gives a list of the information he has already published in pamphlets for the scientist.

Author is Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford, and already known through "Sir Walter Raleigh: a biography." He has chosen seventy-one poets, all of whom have true inspiration. Emerson, Poe, Longfellow and Lowell take their place among the English poets. After each "impression" follows the list of works of the poet from which illustrations for the criticism have been quoted. Each volume has an index of the poets it contains, with dates of birth and death, and an alphabetized index to first words of quotations. The tone throughout is enthusiastic. Poets who cannot be praised are simply passed by and do not come into this Hall of Fame.

In the present volume are collected the poems formerly contained in the "Household edition" and "Poems now first collected," together with a number of pieces written since the publication of the last-named series. Shortly before his death Mr. Stedman gave directions for the preparation of a new volume to contain all the poems which he deemed worthy of preservation, rearranged according to subjects, rather than in the order of their original publication. The editors, in accordance with these instructions, have grouped the various poems, related either by subject or by the occasion which produced them, in eleven sections. A biographical sketch by Linda Stedman precedes the poems.

The author in his preface speaks of the difficulties one is confronted with at the outset in attempting to write a life of William the Conqueror. "The mere details of the king's history, if full discussion were given to all matters which have been the subjects of controversy, would far exceed the possible limits of a volume of this series. . . . On the other hand, a life of William the Conqueror which ignored the changes in constitutional organization and social life which followed the events of 1066 would obviously be a very imperfect thing." Therefore the last three chapters of the book have been reserved for some examination of these questions; many footnotes supplement the text. Index.

Gives an account of a successful attempt to bring about the public ownership of railroads in this country. This is accomplished through the advocacy in Congress of a public ownership bill by a railroad magnate, who gets his measure and puts it first into practice in New York City. The story plays a secondary part. Author is the editor of a leading Colorado newspaper and was at one time state prosecuting attorney, and chooses fiction as his medium to tempt a wider spread of ideas.

All of the stories are fantasies, pure and simple—amusing, full of suggestion, and impossible to happen. Some of the story-tellers have selected the gallant Japan as an antagonist, and others have chosen our cousin England, with a good-natured wit in both cases, and a fine emphasis on human bravery and endurance. Some of the stories are entitled: "A fight in the fog," "The bombardment of the Golden Gate," "The battle off the Hook," "How the North Atlantic Squadron met the enemy," "My borrowed torpedo boat," "Pursued by the Russian police."

Alfred Holt Stone is of the Department of Economics and Sociology of the Carnegie Institution of Washington. Walter F. Willcox, of Cornell University, ranks among the foremost authorities on the negro. His statistical studies of the negro given here contain valuable new information. Neither author is a propagandist, neither suggests a "panacea." The aim of both is exhaustive scientific study of the causes of the alarming conditions of the American race problem. Mr. Stone is at work on a work on "Race relations in America." His contributions here are in the main by products of investigations for his work in the broader field. Mr. Willcox's statistics specially cover negro criminality, the negro's economic position, and the probable increase of the race in this country.

The pessimist Strindberg springs from the people. "The father" was first produced in 1887. It is the story of a couple each one of whom thinks the other insane. The father does not believe their child is his and has no faith in any woman's honor. A pastor tries steadily to argue with him and a nurse shows a strong sense of right and justice. The play is suggestive and vague, but formulates many modern psychological ideas and feelings.

 This book has been prepared in order to provide readers who wish to listen to music intelligently, yet without going into technicalities, with a simple and practical guide to musical appreciation written from the listener's rather than from the professional musician's standpoint.—Preface. An effort has been made to present in untechnical language an account of the evolution of musical art from the primitive folk-song up to the symphony of Beethoven. This evolution is illustrated by musical examples, quoted in the text or given complete in a supplement, which are analyzed, measure by measure. Suggestions for collateral reading for further study are given.

 Based on the fanciful extravaganza, "The top o' the world," that had a long run on the New York stage. Maida, a little girl who was always wishing she was grown up, went at the invitation of "the man with the growly voice" in a flying machine in search of the wishing post, said to be at the north pole. The queer people she meets and the adventures that befall her are too numerous to mention. She finds the wishing post and wishes herself grown up, and forever afterward regrets it.

 Book treats not only of the means and method of education, but of its end and purpose. Professor Swift shows that the true foundation of all teaching should be a study of the individual, based on a knowledge of the environment and racial influences of each child. Dullness, idleness, even criminality may frequently be traced to wrong teaching, that is, a failure to know and understand the personal equation. Some of the chapters are: Standards of human power; Criminal tendencies of boys: their cause and function; The school and the individual; Some nervous disturbances of development; The psychology of learning; Experimental pedagogy, etc. Author is professor of psychology and pedagogy in Washington University, St. Louis.

c. '07. 13+319 p. il. pors. maps, O. cl., $1.50.

These letters are planned to give an idea of how life in some of the representative American colonies might have seemed to children of the time. New England is represented by Plymouth, Salem, Newbury and Providence; the central settlements by New York, Philadelphia and Elizabeth; the southern colonies by Jamestown, St. Mary's and Savannah; and Canada by Quebec. The letters are addressed to a boy or girl friend or a near relative, and are therefore written with the utmost familiarity. The book is written in the language of to-day.

The history of the slow struggle through diplomacy by which France has regained the prestige lost in 1871 to Germany is here told by the honorable first secretary to the French diplomatic service. Through the Russian alliance she first emerges from her isolation, and the subsequent understanding with England, Italy, Spain makes possible the balance of power which to-day exists, however unstable. The new Asiatic problem and "France and the United States" are also treated.

Tarkington, Newton Booth. The guest of Quesnay; il. by W. J. Duncan. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. '07. 335 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "Monsieur Beaucaire" lays his story in the little Norman village of Quesnay. A rich American amateur painter tells the story of his summer with Professor Keredec and his mysterious charge and the lovely American widow, whose husband was killed by an automobile. The charge, supposed to be of weak mind, and the widow furnish the romance. The minor characters, notably the waiter at "The Three Pigeons" hostelry, are among the best the author has created.

Tarkington, Newton Booth, and Wilson, Harry Leon. The man from home; with il. from scenes in the play. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. 176 p. O. cl., $1.25.

A play that ran in a Chicago theatre for a year and has run in New York since last August. "The man from home" is a lawyer from Indiana and the guardian of a pretty wealthy American girl who has been drawn into an engagement with an impecunious Englishman, the son of a duke. The family ask for an immense settlement, the lawyer refusing to grant it. He cleverly exposes them, winning the girl for himself. The time is the present. The scene is Sorrento, in southern Italy.

from the time, when still a little child, she appeared with Charles Kean in 1848, down to her last days at the London Lyceum, and the death of Henry Irving. It is not only the story of her career, but the story of what has been accomplished in theatrical art in the last fifty years. Ellen Terry's friendships with illustrious persons were most remarkable; the details are most fascinating, as are her anecdotes and reminiscences of her contemporaries of the stage. What she has to say about Henry Irving as actor and manager is most illuminating. Profusely illustrated.

Author is emeritus professor of chemistry in the University of Copenhagen. The experimental work for this book was carried out in the years 1851 to 1885, but the greater part belongs to the last 20 years of that period during which the author was director of the chemical laboratory of the University. His information was published in a four-volume work, "Thermochemische untersuchungen." He now wishes to make the original results more accessible than in the larger work. He reviews the whole of the numerical and theoretical results without devoting much space to experimental details. He has reduced the work one-fifth and has provided easy access to the results themselves.

Author is regius professor of natural history in the University of Aberdeen. Has written many works in this line, such as "The study of animal life," "The science of life," etc. The present work is intended as an introduction to the study of heredity. It aims to be comprehensive and accurate, without being exhaustive or mathematical. "I have tried," he says in his preface, "to avoid partisan handling of any theme, though I have been at no pains to conceal my general adherence to what is called Weismannism, or—to take a particular case—my conviction that we do not know of any instance of the transmission of an acquired character." The chief individuality of this edition of a native classic lies in the photographs taken by one who followed in the path of Thoreau through the length of Cape Cod, in modern days, but in the same season of the year. The landscape has changed little since Thoreau's time, and even the people retain the characteristics this dreamer found so interesting.

Thorndike, Ashley Horace. Tragedy. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1908. c. 390 p. D. (Types of English literature; ed. by W. Allan Neilson.) cl., $1.50 net.

Mr Thorndike is professor of English literature in Columbia University and author of "The influence of Beaumont and Fletcher on Shakspeare." This is the first attempt to give the history of English tragedy through the whole course of its development, unencumbered by the biographies of authors or any collateral matters whatever, save those that bear upon the growth of this dramatic species. After the preliminary discussion of definitions, the writer takes account of the origins in classical and mediæval drama, describes the rise of a specifically English type of tragedy in the time of Elizabeth, and thence follows its course, observing and explaining its phases and varieties, through the Restoration, the eighteenth century, and the romantic movement, down to the acting of Browning by Macready.

Thorne, Guy, [pseud. for Cyril Arthur E. Ranger Gull.] The angel. N. Y., George W. Dillingham Co., [1908.] c. 356 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Joseph Bethune, a scholar and scientist, is starving in London, having lost his appointment as teacher by having made a public confession of atheism to the horror of his classes and his friends. He is injured by a falling building and while in the hospital he has a vision, is called by dream to Wales, where he meets a hermit-mystic, who convinces him that he is endowed with a wondrous gift of healing and that he must go as preacher to London. He denounces the wickedness of the great city, is saved by a miracle from assassination. The author teaches that the day of materialism is on the wane and that divine influence watches over every detail of earthly life. A romance pervades this mystic story of personal magnetism.

Thurston, Ernest Temple. Mirage. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. 320 p. D. cl., $1.50

The author of "The apple of Eden" breaks new ground in "Mirage." His scene is an unfashionable boarding house in London. Here his hero has lived for two years after losing in Paris almost all his fortune. The Visconte du Gueslin is a fine specimen of an aristocratic old gentleman, still proud in his poverty. His old valet Courtot has followed him from Paris and taken a position as waiter in a second rate restaurant. His devotion to his old master is beautifully pictured. A small inheritance is the cause of both men going into an English country town, where each finds his little romance. They both forget their years and are lost in the mirage of their illusions.

Among the commonplace lives of an Irish town Stephen Carey and Isabel Costella meet—to weave the inevitable tragedy of their natures—Carey bound to his unimaginative wife Daisy and hopeless routine, yet self-willed and thirsting for a broader experience; Isabel, lovely, impulsive, unwilling to compromise with life. And through their suffering and the final climax runs the happy, good-natured life of Michele Closs Waterford.

Of all the American commonwealths none, perhaps, has a more interesting and romantic history than Wisconsin. Settled by French voyageurs, and harassed by Indian warfare, its early years afford many picturesque incidents for the pen of the historian, while its later development, industrial, agricultural and political, has been typical and significant to a high degree. Dr. Thwaites has been for more than a score of years secretary and superintendent of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, and has had exceptional advantages in the preparation of the present work.

The revolution on the upper Ohio, 1775-1777; compiled from the Draper manuscripts in the library of the Wisconsin Historical Society and published at the charge of the Wisconsin Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. Madison, Wis., Wisconsin Historical Society, 1908. c. 20+275 p. pors. fold. map, D. (Draper ser., v. 2.) cl., $1.50.

This is the first of two projected volumes, to be devoted to the conduct of the Revolution in this wide region. The documents exhibit the frontiersmen's plan of defense against the Indians; it is shown, also, that while garrisoning their log forts and conducting their government, they at the same time promoted Western settlement. The Treaty of Pittsburgh (1775) and other Indian negotiations are reported at length; and the relations of American borderers are shown with the British posts of Detroit, Niagara and the Illinois.

The Princess Nadine, with a Russian father and an American mother, who was the daughter of "Lucky Dick," an enormously rich California miner, has many contradictory characteristics, which the author illustrates through her love affairs. When the story opens her parents are dead, and she is in the care of her grandmother, who is very ambitious for her. She is trying to arrange a match between Nadine and a Russian Prince, who will eventually be king of a petty Russian dependency, when an American appears upon the scene—a man of great wealth, somewhat of a political adventurer, but in the main a gentleman. He and Nadine are mutually attracted, and many plots and counterplots result.

Tollemache came in contact with all the literary men of his day and his desultory reminiscences are full of interesting facts about them.

The scene of this story is Philadelphia, Valley Forge, and the surrounding region; the time is the winter of 1777-'78. The hero, Noah Dare, figured prominently in one of the author's earlier stories, "The camp-fire of Mad Anthony," and he still has many adventures and escapes; other old friends re-appear, too—among them Rachel Wheeler, who is the centre of an apparently baffling mystery. General Wayne ("Mad Anthony") plays an important part. A prominent historical element is the conduct of that wing of the Quakers which insisted on maintaining the old allegiance to the British government. Some of these Friends became the patriot's worst foes.

The story of Father Taylor's mission work in the west. The scene is laid in North Dakota, with incidents connecting it with Montana. Father Taylor is an admirably drawn character, simple, humble—really devout and good. The real hero is Phil Sanders, a high-spirited young fellow, the mystery in whose life is only revealed at the end. He and Father Taylor's daughter Josephine love each other. She is as sincere as her father, and wants in her lover "clean hands" and "no cowardice."

The bishop's emeralds were heirlooms, very beautiful and valuable, but never worn by his wife. Kept in a glass case their fame penetrated even to the apartment of a skilled thief. This thief lived by stealing valuable jewels and cheating at cards. He is represented as being received in exclusive circles and bearing the name and having the appearance of an honorable man. His valet is his confederate, who carries out his deep-laid plans. The successful attempt by the pair to steal the emeralds is the dramatic climax. The bishop's second wife has a past that she has religiously kept secret. The thief also has a past. Many curious scenes are evolved from the two mysteries. The scene is London chiefly.

Travers, Mrs. Libbie Miller. The honor of a Lee. N. Y., Cochrane Publishing Co., 1908. c. 5-383 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The scene of this story opens in Tennessee the year before the Civil War and mainly follows the movements of General Bragg. It is based upon facts and will be of interest both North and South. The love story of Virginia Lee is made interesting by the fact that she is admired by men in the two rival camps, and that her Southern home is destroyed during the invasion by Northern troops.

Travis, Elma Allen, M.D. The cobbler. N. Y., Outing Publishing Co., 1908. c. 10+3-287 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A study of a peculiarly bohemian character. Peter Caverly's father was a village cobbler on the Hudson. Judge Farrington, a wealthy neighbor, had always taken an interest in the boy, who, through the advantages of a college education and association with the family of the Judge, develops into a very attractive character. He has fallen in love with the Judge's daughter, his opposite in every way, when the story opens. They marry in haste, though both are under age. Peter refuses to take anything from his rich father-in-law, earning a living by his pen, turning out to be a great genius.

Mrs. Tremayne spent some years on preliminary studies for the biography of this brilliant personality of the 16th century, the wise and prudent Governess of the Netherlands during the long minority of her nephew, Charles v., who won the admiration and respect of the world. She was not only a great ruler, but a cultured poet, a patron of art, a lover of children, a faithful wife, a pious widow, but above all a woman of sweet feminine charm. For political reasons she was married three times before she was 22 and remained a widow after the age of 24. The account here given of the life of this great princess is chiefly from material not heretofore used by English historians.

Trevena, J. Furze the cruel. N. Y., Moffat, Yard & Co., 1908. 8+391 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author explains at the beginning of his novel the significance of his title. "Almost everywhere on Dartmoor," he says, "are furze, heather and granite. The furze seems to suggest cruelty, the heather endurance, and the granite strength. . . . This work is the first of a proposed trilogy which the author hopes to continue and complete with 'Heather' and 'Granite.'" Mr. Trevena describes Dartmoor and Dartmoor folk with realism.

A parsonage in Australia is the scene of a story for young people. Its inhabitants are five boys full of spirits and their father, a little, absent-minded emistert the mother is dead and they are quite poor. Their one servant, an angular elderly woman, makes them as comfortable as is possible. To the patronage comes Miss Bobbie, on a two years' visit, while her father and step-mother are in Europe. Miss Bobbie is a bright girl of eleven. First dreaded by the boys, she is taken to their hearts once they meet. They teach her all their games, and she has a fine time.

When Mrs. Cameron went from Australia to England with her little daughter Challis, who was gaining a reputation as a musical genius, her husband, a well meaning but absolutely unpractical man, was left in charge of the other children. Things were soon in a bad condition; Mr. Cameron lost his situation and the family lived in poverty, but no word was sent to Mrs. Cameron and Challis of the state of affairs. When they return, eight years later, they find a changed household, but Challis, who is now famous and wealthy, is able to bring comfort to the family. The love affair of the eldest daughter, Hermie, and the final removal of the family to England finish the book.

Author is professor of biology in Amherst College. Among the host of books written on evolution, Darwinism, and natural selection few zoologists have attempted to show the bearing of the theory of evolution on man's history, progress and life. They have left this problem to the archaeologist and sociologist. The author emphasizes throughout this study the importance of moral and religious powers, as well as of social and family life. He speaks of functions, powers, actions, list of organs and structure. He does not know the location of the organ of fellow feeling, hate, morals, mental powers, and all the traits that distinguished man from man in his highest present state of evolution.

The first issue in a new series of geographies.

The author is lecturer in geography, Goldsmith's College, University of London. His aim is to give a wide variety of important geographical facts with exercises based upon them bringing out the causes and principles underlying these facts. He further aims to accustom pupils to the intelligent use of statistics, especially those dealing with the conditions and progress of countries. This volume, however, relates chiefly to physical geography and the making of maps.

Borbee is sent by the fairies to search for the tear flower, which shall free the fairy queen's daughter from the power of Fairy Allbad. He meets an entrancing little girl, Spritey, and is so merry playing with her in the Happy Garden that he forgets his mission until she suddenly leaves him. Then comes a sorrowful time, when his friend, the Wisp, who has accompanied him, fades quite away with grief. But the discovery of the flower and rescue of the Princess, who turns out to be Spritey, makes a joyous ending.

Mr. Upton is the author of the well-known "Standard operas," "Standard oratorios," etc. During the greater part of the latter half of the nineteenth century he was engaged in musical criticism in Chicago. His "Memories" begin with Jenny Lind, Sontag, Alboni, Madame Thillon and Catherine Hayes, all of whom he heard sing but did not know personally. Those whose names follow he was well acquainted with, and tells many amusing anecdotes of them, with details of personal history, not known to every one. Taking up his reminiscences again with Patti, he pictures every artist of note down to the present day. Index.

Combines in a single volume, in condensed form, the contents of "The standard oratorios," "Standard symphonies" and "Standard cantatas," works long prized by musical students and music lovers. Some new matter has been added to bring the volume down to date, including notices of works by Brückner, Cowen, Dvorak, Elgar, Franck, Mackenzie, Park-er, Parry, Sinding, Richard Strauss and Tchaikovsky. The text has been made as untechnical as possible, and enriched with portraits of the composers whose works are described.

The author is a prince of an ancient family, a member of the first Duma and a courageous patriot. He reveals the methods of the governors, the schemes of the police department, the intrigues and corruptions that are sapping the Slavonic government. The author is a believer in a constitutional monarchy. As governor of Bessarabia shortly after the terrible massacre of Kishinev he inexorably traced the responsibility for that crime to the government he served, and in so doing unearthed many secrets.

Vacandard, Elphège. The Inquisition: a critical and historical study of the coercive power of the church; tr. from the 2d ed. by Bertrand L. Conway. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1908. c. '07. 14+284 p. D. cl., *$1.50 net.

The author claims there is only one way of defending the attitude of the Catholic church in the Middle Ages toward the Inquisition. He says: "We must examine and judge this institution objectively, from the standpoint of morality, justice and religion, instead of comparing its excesses with the blameworthy actions of other tribunals." He feels no historian has yet treated the Inquisition from this objective standpoint. The special value of the book lies in its criticisms, original or quoted, of the existing literature on the Inquisition. Bibliography (5 p.).

The Farrells were two English girls left orphaned very young. Their mother married a kind, unsuccessful man and a sister and four brothers were added to the family. The two older girls worked hard, longed for good times and "made believe" to fill their romantic longings. A rich uncle appears, takes them to his estate for a visit and studies their characters. He makes his will; the result is a surprise, but dear, loving, irresponsible Molly gets the man who gets the heritage and all her family benefit.

Valera, Juan. Pepita Jiménez; ed., with notes and vocabulary, by G. L. Lincoln. Bost., Heath, 1908. c. 12+245 p. por. D. (Heath's modern language ser.) cl., 90 c.

The present text is based on that of the nineteenth edition of "Pepita Jiménez," as published in 1904 at Madrid. The novel was first published in Spanish in 1874, and is one of the first of the author's and a forerunner of the modern Spanish school of fiction. This is an abridgment of the work; the editor having found it better, from a classroom point of view, to leave out many pages of delicate mysticism. Bibliography (1 p.).

By the author of "The brass bowl." A young American artist in London, having heard from his lawyer that all his property in San Francisco has been lost through the earthquake, is returning home at once, when he is called upon by a stranger, who asks a service from him. This introduces "the black bag" full of jewels, and a beautiful young girl, with whom the American at once falls in love. A remarkable series of adventures result, in which the American is innocently involved, the interest being ingeniously sustained to the last page.

Vandewalker, Nina Catharine. The kindergarten in American education. N. Y., Macmillan, 1908. c. 13+274 p. por. D. cl., $1.25 net.

This work is a summary of the kindergarten movement in the United States, and shows how vitally the kindergarten and the principles which it embodies have influenced American life and thought. The service that women's organizations have rendered the kindergarten; the extent to which churches are adopting it as an agency in Sunday-school and missionary work; and its effectiveness in social settlement and welfare work, are some of the topics that will make the book of interest to the general reader. There is a frontispiece portrait of Mrs. Carl Schurz, the first kindergartner of the United States.

Naaman, the Assyrian, is the central figure of this drama, which is not only deeply poetic, but strong in plot and human interest. The scene is laid in Damascus and the mountains of Assyria in 850 a.c. Naaman, the great captain, stricken with leprosy at the moment of his victory and the subject of a conspiracy of his unfaithful wife and the priests of Rimmon, is saved by the captive Israel, the maid Ruahmah, who brings him to the prophet Elisha, by whom his leprosy is cured. The drama moves through stirring action to its fine climax in his return to Damascus, a convert to the Jewish faith.

The author of "The last of the royal Stuarts" has written a work wherein special prominence is given to the social and artistic life of the magnificent court of Leo x., first and greater of the two great pontiffs of the Florentine House of Medici, and one of the most important characters of the Italian Renaissance. Contemporary politics are touched upon but lightly, so as not to interfere with the main object of the work, which is intended to depict the personal careers of these two papal patrons of art—Leo x. and Clement vii.—both in Rome and Florence. Contains much matter hitherto unknown to English readers, and is profusely illustrated with historical portraits. Bibliography (2 p.). Index.

Vaughan, Owen, ["Owen Rhoscomyl," pseud.] Vronina. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1908. c. '07. 6+306 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

The scenes of the novel are laid among the mountains and glens of the Welsh coast, which the author describes with much enthusiasm. The story is a love story with a refined, beautiful heroine. The hero, after travelling the world over, returns a rich man to his early home in Wales, and falls in love with Ina Vronina at first sight. He determines to win her in spite of the fact of a rival and other obstacles. The story is full of local color both in scenes and characters, and is wholesome and poetical.

Each chapter considers the life of a great missionary and his relation to his work, the author believing that no method is so practically effective in arousing the student's interest and in helping him see the facts in their true perspective as the biographical. There are chapters on Paul, Patrick, Augustine, Boniface, Francis of Assisi, Judson, Livingstone, and many others.

The author is professor of church history in Crozer Theological Seminary. The underlying thought of the book is this, that in the formal sense of the term there was no such thing as a closed canon. In the course of time, however, the subconsciousness of the church or churches, rather than hierarchical authority, decided on certain books and rejected others, and so we have our New Testament. Whether this conclusion shall be reached or not by the reader will depend very largely on his point of view.

The three comrades, Chot, Fleet and Tom, who figured in "Comrades on the farm," are the characters in a new series of adventures. Mr. Ford, on whose farm they worked in the summer, invites them to his home in New York for their Christmas holidays. In getting to the city there is an accident on the railroad and they lose their baggage. In trying to regain it they get innocently mixed up in some criminal doings, and are the means of aiding the police in arresting a gang of smugglers.

The first volume of a new series for boys. The comrades are three boys not yet finished at school who are permitted by their fathers to go on tours in search of experience in vacation time. In this book they start for a town seventy miles away, intending to tramp it—but get tired and finish up with the stage coach. They then hire out as farm hands and have a variety of "experiences," especially with a gang of horse thieves. But on the whole they enjoy themselves immensely.

The plot is woven within the walls of Versailles, where the Marquise de Pompadour spins a network of intrigue which finally enmeshes the hero, a young courtier of care free life, who becomes infatuated with this amazing Royal favorite of low birth, who, though not the true heroine, passes dominately through the story. His rash avoidance of Louis' order of exile and the ensuing wrath of the King bring countless misfortune, till his love for the true heroine, a brave-hearted convent girl, and his final hatred for the black splendor of this Palace of Danger draws the tale to a happy ending.

Señor De Sanchez, a Mexican, is mysteriously murdered by a silver dagger under circumstances which seem to point with equal certainty to any one of four people, three of whom might easily have wished for his removal. The plot is complicated by a second murder, the victim, a General Peyton Westbrook, father of two of the people who may have been concerned in De Sanchez's death. The unraveling of the mystery, following many clues, makes up the plot of the story.

Wallace, Edgar. Angel Esquire. N. Y., Henry Holt & Co., 1908. c. 6+321 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

An old man, who had accumulated an immense fortune by keeping gambling houses in various parts of the world, where his victims were mercilessly fleeced, thinking his end was near made a strange will, leaving either to three of his confederates or to a young girl whose father he had ruined the millions he had stered in a wonderfully constructed safe—that is, to whichever one should decipher the meaning of a verse he had enclosed in the will, which gave the word for opening the safe. This results in a brutal fight among the men, who try to kill each other or the girl. Angel Esquire is the detective who follows events to a sequence.

Wallace, G. The disinherited: observations in travel, giving new views and descriptions of old routes and scenes; also conditions of old world people observed and depicted, with incidental study of the cause of the poverty which afflicts so many; followed by timely comments on home topics. N. Y., J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Co., [1908.] c. 3-215 p. D. cl., $1.

In a series of "Observations on travel" the author makes a sympathetic study of conditions of a large proportion of the various peoples existing in want and misery. To find so many starving in a land of plenty excites the traveller's curiosity until he realizes that the bounties of nature have been monopolized by the privileged few, and the common people have been disinherited.

Wallace, Helen. Life's chequer-board; with 4 il. by Howard Somerville. N. Y., Cassell, 1908. 8+340 p. D. cl., $1.50.

An unjust will, and the sudden death of the maker of it when it was thought he was about to change it, starts a dramatic story of English life. Richard Skene makes Adrian Skene, his cousin and the last male of the line, his heir on condition that he marries Lesley Horne, with whom he has been brought up. The pair are attached to each other, but object to a forced marriage. After Richard Skene's death Lesley inherits all his fortune, Adrian being cut off entirely. Later a will is found which would have altered everything—but it was unsigned.

A plain statement of the present social upheaval in Russia. The author says he has not written "for the casual reader or for him who draws from this tragic and inspiring situation a mere interest in the chances of the fight or in its melodramatic aspects," but appeals "rather to those seriously interested in the Russian revolutionary movement for the light it sheds on that all-inclusive problem, the future of human society." He spent part of two years in Russia in order to gain a rounded view. He had a personal acquaintance with a majority of the most important leaders of all parties and elements of the Russian nation, many of whom he met in exile in various parts of the world. It is the story of the last four years in Russia, as seen by an intelligent observer. Bibliographical note (4 p.). Index.

A novel based on the play, "The undertow," and written by the author of "Paid in full." It is a story of a great struggle for the control of political forces for the personal benefit of a wealthy capitalist in the middle West. An old-fashioned southern girl becomes very closely associated with this man, who treats her as his daughter. When his political opponent and this girl first meet they fall in love. Spurred on by the desire to do something that will make him worthy of Mary, and also having the people's interest at heart, Richard Wells fights the colossal power of the capitalist, which results in an unexpected issue.

This English story tells of Joseph Fortescue, who died from shock received on hearing of the total loss of all his money and also that of others which had been entrusted to him. Kenneth, his son, in accordance with his father's last words, removes from the safe a letter addressed to him. On opening the letter he is disappointed to find nothing but blank sheets of paper. One of the maids is suspected of having stolen the original letter. Very unexpectedly, and from a peculiar quarter, the letter is brought to light—but the most important word has been blotted out. The balance of the story hangs on the discovery of the missing word.

Mallory; il. by W. Hatherell. N. Y., Harper, 1908. c. '07. 549 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

Young, gracious, highminded, warm hearted, Diana Mallory is brought with brutal suddenness into the knowledge that her dead young mother has murdered a man whom the world believed her lover. Just before the blow strikes Diana is betrothed to the man she loves. He, hard pressed by ambition, listens to a worldly mother and deserts Diana. The world takes the girl's part, and her lover is a political failure. When he is broken and ashamed and awake at last, the girl, unembittered, goes to him—and makes him the man he was meant to be. The story is set in a brilliant framework of the social and political life of England the writer knows so well.

The panther is temptation, which at first seems but a dark shadow, dimly seen, lurking near. As the man and woman realize and admit that there is danger the creature takes shape, at first it is merely a wee cub, but gradually gains in size and strength, and always its golden eyes gleam at the woman. The idea of temptation growing in force and power as it is yielded to making victory increasingly difficult, is the theme of this piece of symbolic writing. The illustrations and page borders in which the lithe body of the beast can always be discerned, add to the weird effect of the book.

By the author of "Susan Clegg and her friend Mrs. Lathrop," "Seeing France with Uncle John," etc. A more maddening travelling companion than Uncle John one can hardly imagine. He is a remarkable American who loves to travel, but the quicker he can do up a foreign town the better he is pleased. He goes to England, taking with him a staid old college professor, and he writes to his niece and her husband, who live in Oxford, to meet him—but neglects to give steamer or date. He lands at Liverpool, gallops up to Carlisle and Edinburgh, takes in the west coast of England on the run, with the niece and her husband tagging on behind and trying to overtake him. Uncle John is exceedingly funny and never guesses he is funny.

The "Land of the living" is America; the particular section, the political circles of Chicago. A typical "boss," a warm-hearted Irishman of flexible moral code, adopts a waif, educates him for a lawyer, and takes him to Ireland to see "the land of the dead." A young Irish girl, the starving scion of an old race is tempted by reports to try her fortunes in Chicago. She becomes companion, instructor and generally useful helper. The lawyer sees through the political "morality," refuses to act with his patron, and brings about a combination of circumstances in which the underlying love stories are worked to satisfactory issues.

In the beautiful Middle West stood an old house that had belonged to Governor Gwynne. He died in the early '80's and his heirs, 20 of them, decide to let the house. A Southern family moved in, and owing to their social fascinations they lived for three years, buying everything, entertaining everyone with fairs, balls, private theatricals, picnics—and paying nothing. A young girl tells the story and makes the life of the '80's, the customs, manners, dress, and amusements very real to those who remember a generation back. An old doctor, his mysterious servant, and the whole Gwynne family are alive in the story.

Weather and weather instruments. Rochester, N. Y., Taylor Instrument Companies, 1908. c. 175 p. il. diagrs., map, D. cl., *$1 net.

An exhaustive study of what is known of weather, of which the first records are found in mythical stories and old superstitions. The barometer was discovered by Torricelli in 1643, and before him his great teacher Galileo had discovered the principles of the thermometer, and the data from the readings of all these two instruments form the foundation of all meteorological science. This work describes the extent and weight of atmosphere; the influence of weather on human beings, mentally, morally and physically; how the sun regulates the weather; the forecasting of storms, why it thunders, and all the intricate instruments used in weather prognostication. The material is put together by a literary hand and many quotations are given to show the great influence of "weather."

The author wrote this book when the Wright brothers were still but vaguely known and aerial navigation was a mere fad of impractical men. The exciting narrative tells of a young English mechanic who drifts across the Channel into Germany in a runaway balloon, is picked up by German airships on their way to make sudden war upon the United States, a war which ultimately involves every nation on the globe. The annihilation that follows would not have been possible "if the money and resources that had been spent in making war had been spent in making men." The result is a return for the whole world to primitive conditions—"a life of homely economics in the most intimate contact with cows and hens and patches of ground."

A presentation of a new line of argument concerning the divinity of Christ. The work is the third volume in a series of six works to be published under the title of "Modern doubt." These volumes represent Mr. Wendling's lectures, revised and greatly enlarged. They all deal in a novel way with every phase of modern skepticism, from the deism of the eighteenth century to the agnosticism of the twentieth. "The man of Galilee" is published now in response to a demand and out of the regular order.

It is proposed to show that a vast amount of evidence exists which proves that throughout the geological ages up to recent time our earth was girt with belts of planetesimal or gaseous matter. The nature of the evidence demonstrates that these belts were potent factors in producing the climatic changes which marked the various geologic periods. They were the cause of the Ice ages. It is argued that since man lived at the time of the Ice age he witnessed the scenes accompanying the downfall of the zonal-belts. These so impressed him that he recorded the facts in his primitive nature-myths. Half the volume is given up to the interpretation of these echoes. While the language is scientific, the book appeals to the general reader.

In story form young readers may obtain from "War children" a good outline of the Civil War in the North, from the first shot fired at Fort Sumter to the assassination of Lincoln. The characters are two boys, whose father enlists on the first call for troops, is wounded in battle, taken as a prisoner to Libby Prison, from whence he escapes, aided by a patriotic colored man, and gets back home again. The children's interest in the war is uppermost. They play war, build forts, take parts with the different generals, etc. They are quaint and amusing, the story being set far from battlefields.

The principal aim has been to present concisely those ideas most important to a general understanding of the natural relation existing between life and health, together with an explanation of the laws which render mental healing possible. Another purpose has been to set forth the demonstrated facts of metaphysical healing in such a manner that inquiring minds may be enabled personally to examine through the experiences of those around them some of the common lines of mental action in which proofs are obtainable that mind both causes and cures disease.—Preface.

Author is professor of history in the University of Minnesota. This work is intended to supply the brief, up-to-date college text which teachers of English constitutional history have long wanted. It emphasizes evolution rather than description; to furnish a logically satisfying account of the genesis of each institution as far as present knowledge permits is its purpose. It presupposes the accompanying use of a general narrative of English history and a book of documents, the author believing that narrative and institutional history cannot be profitably combined in the same work, and that nothing can take the place of the first-hand study of documents in class. White, Stewart E: The riverman; il. by N. C. Wyeth and Clarence F. Underwood. N. Y., McClure Co., 1908. c. 6+368 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

This, the most important piece of fiction the author has undertaken since "The blazed trail," is the logical successor of that work. His hero is Jack Orde, "the river man," who from being foreman of a driving gang enters into partnership with an eastern man of his own age, Joseph Newmark, to control log-driving on a Michigan river. At the same time he falls in love with a girl from New York—Carroll Bishop—who is visiting in Orde's home town and whom he follows to New York and marries there. Eight years he and his partner prosper and extend their operations into all directions, buying wood land, cutting their own timber, etc. Treachery both of man and nature nearly ruins the man, but he is shown to have indomitable pluck and wins out in the face of almost inevitable disaster.

Author is professor in Grant University, Athens, Tennessee. He does not accept the "nebular hypothesis" of Laplace in explanation of the solar system. His theory is that the real cause of all earthquakes and volcanoes hinges on Sir Isaac Newton's law of gravitation. In proof of this he quotes the Bible story of the Creation. Considerable space is given to the earthquakes of San Francisco, Valparaiso and Kingston for the purpose of showing the course such events usually take.

A gossip record of the events and memories of a long life passed in the British diplomatic service. Sir Henry had experience at almost every court in Europe, conducted a special mission in Persia, and closed his official career as ambassador to Spain during the Spanish-American war. He had an inside view of every important event of the last sixty years, was one of the famous "Fourth Party," composed of Sir Randolph Churchill, Balfour, Sir John Gcrst and himself, and was noted as a teller of good stories. Moving everywhere among men and women in whom the world has been or is interested, and living in the heart of social London, he met with and accumulated an immense amount of personal, anecdotal material, for which the modern reader, as well as the future historian, will be grateful.

The town of Blandford was settled in 1735 by a colony of Scotch-Irish, and was located on the main highway of the Province of Massachusetts Bay connecting Boston and Albany, as it is now on the direct automobile route between Springfield and Lenox. It has had a rich and varied stage-coach and tavern history. For five years past or more the author has been engaged in the study of the history of this town having made minute investigation of the town and church records, then of a couple of thousand or so of deeds in the Springfield registry, supplementing this by a like study of other material in both Springfield and Northampton, such as inventories, records of license, of county roads, etc. In writing up this material it was my intent to devote two or three chapters to the tavern features, which presently expanded to such proportions as to demand much more space. In no small degree the tavern and turnpike story shapes and describes the social development of the town, so rich in fact and incident.

Wood, Walter. The revenge of Gilbert Strange; with a frontispiece by Max Cowper. N. Y., Cassell, 1908. 299 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Confident of the stability of the business inherited from his father, Gilbert Strange led a comfortable, easy-going life until the day when the great crash came. Financial ruin—followed by social ostracism, and his dismissal by his hancle—revealed to him his real strength, and created the desire to avenge himself upon those who had triumphed in his downfall. The rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, wishes to make clear to his readers the personality and the teachings of Gustav Theodor Fechner, of Leipzig, who grappled with some of the greatest problems of that great science, the nature of God and God's relation to the soul. He believes there is a desire abroad for a more spiritual life and a more spiritual interpretation of life. He calls his work "The living Word" in memory of the "Zend Avesta," which Fechner believed to have that meaning.

The object of this book is to describe in plain terms the work in behalf of nervous sufferers which has been undertaken in Emmanuel Church, Boston (Episcopal). It is the joint work of three friends, each of whom is responsible for his own contributions. Dr. Elwood Worcester is Rector of the church; Dr. McComb is his assistant in the church; Dr. Coriat, who is responsible for chapters 8-13, is a physician for diseases of the nervous system in Boston City Hospital, and was formerly physician in the Worcester, Mass., Insane Hospital. The book illustrates the alliance of the most up-to-date neurological science and the simplest form of the Christian religion and the possibilities of such alliance.

A story of seven girls who have banded themselves together for mutual help and cheer under the name of "Nous Autres." They represent collectively the professions open to women of no deliberate training, though well educated. They are introduced to the reader at one of their weekly gatherings and the author depicts the home and business life of each one individually.

Wyllarde, Dolf. Rose-white youth. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. c. 336 p. D. cl., †$1.50.

"Rose-White Youth," Betty Annisdell, the little heroine, is fifteen when the story opens, which ends on her sixteenth birthday. She has quantities of fiery red hair and sleepy grey eyes, which do not show the workings of her precociously active brain. Captain Rugby's kiss awakens the woman in Betty, and her short little history is full of pathos. Betty's favorite horse also plays his little part in this story of "not wisely but too well."

A middle aged widow who keeps a small "queerio" shop in the east end of London is found to be the missing heiress of a large fortune. By the terms of the will she takes up her residence with her next of kin, an aristocratic west end family. Her cockney accent and impossible dress cause some of her snobbish relatives extreme anguish, but her shrewd sense and goodness of heart win her the esteem of others. She acts as fairy godmother, plays providence in a love affair and finally, when the choice between money and peace of mind comes to her, she decides in a way that is eminently satisfactory to the reader.
- Young, Alexander Bell Filson. When the tide turns. Bost., Dana Estes & Co., 1908. c. 357 p. D. cl., *$1.50.
Rupert Savage had been brought up by two unmarried aunts who lived in an old abbacy on the northern coast of Ireland. From early youth he delighted to make pictures with just a few suggestive strokes. When 21 he goes to London and becomes "the rage" among the circle of writers, painters and musicians devoted to outré suggestive or realistic methods. He finally illustrates a book of "Syrian songs" which the author has described to him. His work is pronounced remarkable, but he is condemned for associating it with erotic poetry. He is impressionable and women have great influence on his life. The end is "of the new order."

Young, F. E. Mills. A mistaken marriage. N. Y., John Lane Co., (The Bodley Head,) 1908. 379 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

On the first night of her arrival in South Africa Sara Lovell falls into casual conversation with an Englishman, Michael Strange, who is wonderfully attracted by her personality and unusual beauty. The next morning he discovers that she has come from England to marry her fiancé, Arthur Morrison, whom she has not seen for five years. The marriage proves most unhappy. Morrison is brutal and unprincipled, and is deeply infatuated with the dashing Mrs. Davidson. On a visit to Mrs. Davidson Sara discovers that her husband is the father of Mrs. Davidson's child, and at once leaves with her own little girl. They are obliged to take refuge from a severe storm in a house noted for hospitality. Its owner is absent, and the only inhabitant except for the servants is Michael Strange. Her child's illness obliges Sara to remain for several days, and though the child dies and Sara is heartbroken, her husband heartlessly uses this as a pretext for obtaining a divorce. Though Strange is still deeply in love with her, Sara refuses to marry during her former husband's lifetime, but before long she hears of his death and all ends well.

Stories of the gods whom the ancestry of the English worshipped. Divided into two parts, "Stories of the gods" and "Stories of the heroes," which includes "The story of Sigmund," "The story of Sigurd," "The story of Helge" and "The story of Beowulf." Notes.

Zogbaum, Rufus Fairchild. The junior officer of the watch; il. by the author. N. Y., Appleton, 1908. c. 7+311 p. D. cl., *$1.50.

The junior officer of the United States cruiser "Dearborn," flagship of the European squadron, is introduced going on shore at Lishon with a telegram to send for his lieutenant. This telegram began all the troubles the artist-author's imagination makes him undergo. Life aboard ship is graphically described, and the beautiful sights of Gibraltar and the Mediterranean make a telling background for the pretty love episodes.
